Advocacy/Opinion

Column: Terrorism is common enemy, not refugees

"The rise of terrorism as a global challenge and universal threat to all free and peace-loving people and the shared values they hold is not new. A few factors contributed to the escalation of this scourge, such as wars, sectarian divide, poverty, despair, hopelessness, etc. It appears in the midst of other ongoing problems. There are festering problems in Syria and Iraq that are breeding grounds for terrorism and are inspiring terrorism everywhere."

What's behind state government curtain? We should demand to know

"As roads crumble and schools face budget cuts, politicians in Lansing bought themselves a new state Senate office building that could run taxpayers as much as $134 million. The decision to give the contract to a Lansing developer was made in a backroom by subcommittee — a prime example of how large donors are rewarded in Lansing while voters face cuts to basic services."

Michigan should host refugee summit

"The four year-old war in Syria has displaced more than half its population of 22 million. Nearly 13 million people have been uprooted, 8 million within the country and 5 million who have fled Syria altogether: 2 million to Turkey, and a million each to Jordan and Lebanon. Another million Syrians are trying to migrate to Europe and North America. Despite the trauma suffered in its capital, France has declared it will welcome 30,000 refugees. But here at home, our government's pledge to accept 10,000 refugees, barely 1 percent of the absorption rate to Europe, has been met with backlash by the public and politicians alike."

Detroit Caucus Members Uncover EAA-DPS Plan to Charter 31 Schools

The district has not met the criteria set forth during Eastern Michigan's University's Dec. 5, 2014, Board of Regents meeting calling for transparency and partnership and has done irreparable harm to the remaining 4,500 students in EAA-run schools. EMU has an interlocal agreement with the school district of the city of Detroit, which is necessary for the existence of the EAA."

2014 ACS 5-year Estimates

"The U.S. Census Bureau has released the 2014 American Community Survey (ACS) 5-year estimates. The 5-year ACS estimates represent the most current and comprehensive dataset available describing a wide range of socioeconomic and housing characteristics, which allow community, state, and business leaders to make better, data-driven decisions. Since the 5-year estimates have a larger sample size than the 1- year estimates, there is not a size limit on the geographies which can be accessed, which means that these estimates contain data for all counties, cities, towns, villages and other minor civil divisions in Michigan."

Students to Demand Halt of Charter Authorizing Without Accountability

"LANSING – Recognizing the plight that students and parents face with the lack of accountability in charter schools in Detroit, college students from across the state will gather on Friday afternoon to call for a halt of opening and closing of schools in Detroit. The students, along with the Students in Solidarity group, will hold a press conference at the Michigan Council of Charter School Authorizers (MCCSA) office to demand the Authorizing Council create a policy that will limit the activity of authorizers. The group points to the fact that there are 12 charter school authorizers disproportionately operating in the city of Detroit, with no oversight from residents in the city. This has left many neighborhoods in the city with no schools at all. The students will be standing in solidarity with the 482Forward fasters and marchers as they continue their protest of the lack of accountability within charter and EAA schools in Detroit."

Advocacy/Opinion

Senate absentee-voting bill takes away more than it gives

"While much of the rest of the country has brought voting into the 21st century, Michigan has kept its badly outdated election laws. It is one of a minority of states that offers a limited number of options for hard-working Americans to register to vote and cast a ballot before Election Day. A Michigan voter cannot vote before Election Day without a valid excuse, must register nearly a month before the election without exception and cannot register online as voters in more than half the country now can."

However, a number of mischaracterizations and omissions warrant a response."

2016 Omnibus Spending Bill Protects the National Housing Trust Fund

"WASHINGTON, DC – The National Low Income Housing Coalition (NLIHC) is pleased with the treatment of low income housing programs in the proposed FY 2016 Omnibus Appropriations bill that Congressional leaders released this morning. While funding levels remain wholly inadequate to meet the housing needs of low income Americans, the bill is a significant improvement over the HUD appropriations bills passed by the House of Representatives and the Senate Appropriations Committee earlier this year under the constraints of sequestration. Increased funding was made possible by the lifting of the sequester caps in the "Balanced Budget Act" passed in October."

Advocacy/Opinion

Wolfram: Data center bill consistent with tax policy

"The state Senate recently passed bills that deal with exempting data centers from the sales and use taxes as well as the personal property tax. While most of the discussion has been about the effect on economic activity, in particular whether the tax reductions will advance economic activity in Michigan, it is useful to examine the fundamental theory of the sales taxes and whether the property tax exemption is consistent with current policy."

Peters Applauds Extension of Tax Credit for Businesses Employing Military Reservists & National Guar

"WASHINGTON, DC – U.S. Senator Gary Peters (MI), a former Lieutenant Commander in the U.S. Navy Reserve, today applauded the expansion and permanent extension of a tax credit for employers that provide differential pay to military reservists and National Guard members called to serve on active duty. The tax credit, which was included in an end-of-year government spending and tax bill, would apply to all businesses, but the extension is particularly helpful for small businesses that may find it more difficult to absorb the costs of providing differential pay. Earlier this year, Peters introduced the Military Reserve Small Business Jobs Act with Senator Joni Ernst (R-IA), a former Lieutenant Colonel in the Iowa Army National Guard, to extend this tax credit for small businesses for five years, providing financial security for the families of Reservists and National Guardsmen serving on active duty."

Christmas story urges us to find compassion for exiled

Snyder plan to fix Detroit schools slow to gain steam

"Lansing – — Detroit needs more than a revitalized downtown with new office workers to spur its rebirth following the largest public bankruptcy in U.S. history. It needs to upgrade a public school system that's considered the worst of its size in the nation. Michigan Gov. 's Republican governor Rick Snyder is proposing another pricey state bailout and a sweeping reorganization that could lead to closing independent, publicly funded charter schools, where an increasing number of city students are enrolled. The posture is at odds with Republicans' unflinching commitment to the school-choice movement, and the plan's implementation will require convincing bailout-fatigued lawmakers to send $715 million more to Detroit."

Bieda: Bills would leave voters in dark

"Lawmakers in Lansing recently worked late into the night to pass a series of controversial bills, one of which grew from 12 to 53 pages in the span of an hour. Republicans barred Democrats' staff from the Senate floor to make it harder for us to review the amended legislation, and immediately forced a vote. It's ironic that they eliminated straight-ticket voting on the pretext of helping voters make educated decisions, and yet failed to allow educated voting in their own chambers."

Editorial: Emergency management law working for cities

"Michigan will start the year with not one of its local communities under emergency management, with the emergence of Lincoln Park from state control last week. While Detroit Public Schools and other school districts, as well as Wayne County, still are operating under some form of state financial oversight, for the first time in 15 years no cities have emergency managers.

Archaic Prevailing Wage Law Should Be Repealed

"In Michigan, government entities, such as school districts, must pay all contractors union wages for construction projects — the so-called prevailing wage. This wage rate is established by the state and is based on wages collectively bargained for by unions in the region where the construction work is being done. Market wages set by open competition are explicitly forbidden. The lawwas first enacted in 1965 when a much larger portion of Michigan's construction force was unionized, but today, in the construction industry, only one-fifth of workers belong to labor unions.

On This Day In Michigan History

On Dec. 30, 1936, the Flint sit down strike began. Spurred by an unfounded rumor that work was going to be transferred to plants with weak union support, autoworkers began a spontaneous sit down strike at General Motors' plants in Flint. Often described as the most important strike in American labor history, the Flint sit down strike ended in early February when General Motors recognized the United Auto Workers to represent its workers.

Editor's note: A copy of the official declaration is available at the link below.

Gov. Snyder declares emergency for Genesee County

State Emergency Operations Center activated to assist with relief efforts

LANSING, Mich. – Gov. Rick Snyder today declared a state of emergency for Genesee County due to the ongoing health and safety issues caused by lead in the city of Flint's drinking water.

By declaring a state of emergency, Snyder has made available all state resources in cooperation with local response and recovery operations. The declaration authorizes the Michigan State Police, Emergency Management and Homeland Security Division (MSP/EMHSD) to coordinate state efforts.

"The health and welfare of Flint residents is a top priority and we're committed to a coordinated approach with resources from state agencies to address all aspects of this situation," Snyder said. "Working in full partnership with the Flint Water Advisory Task Force, all levels of government and water quality experts, we will find both short-term and long-term solutions to ensure the health and safety of Flint residents."

In addition to the emergency declaration, Snyder activated the State Emergency Operations Center to coordinate state response and recovery activities. State agencies will report to the center to coordinate resources, assess the situation and begin providing assets to assist with local relief operations.

"Our staff recognizes the urgency of this situation and is already working closely with local officials," said Capt. Chris A. Kelenske, Deputy State Director of Emergency Management and Homeland Security and commander of the MSP/EMHSD. "We will continue to collaborate with state, city and county leaders to coordinate relief efforts, streamline communication and use all available resources to help residents."

On Jan. 4, Genesee County declared a "local state of emergency," which activated local emergency response and recovery plans. By requesting a governor's declaration, the county has determined local resources are insufficient to address the situation and state assistance is required to protect public health, safety and property to lessen or avert the threat of a crisis.

The city of Flint has been under a local emergency declaration since Dec. 14, 2015.

The SEOC is the emergency operations center for the state of Michigan. Located in Lansing, the center is overseen by the MSP/EMHSD and coordinates response and recovery efforts by state agencies and local government. The SEOC is staffed by members of state agencies and other partners for decision making and information coordination during disasters or emergencies in the state of Michigan.

What About The Seats?

"It's hard at times to know what should and should not be shared with people about the mechanical processes of official government, nor what is even worth sharing, and how it affects them. As a representative my first duty is of course to God, then to my family, then my home district, and finally to the great people of our state that truly want a voice that is uncompromising in its advocacy for the cause of freedom and liberty. All of this should be done with a sense of decorum and civility that is due the respect of the office with which I have been entrusted. "

Michigan has multiple opportunities to reap the economic benefits of a world transitioning from fossil-fuel based energy sources to advanced energy technologies that will power the century ahead, provided it can eliminate the barriers that stand in the way. Those barriers range from transactional and organizational issues to barriers that are economic and policy-based. That is among the findings outlined in Barriers to Advanced Energy in Michigan, a report by the Institute for Energy Innovation (IEI) funded by the C.S. Mott Foundation with support from The Energy Foundation.

Why collective bargaining still works

"The recently concluded negotiations between the Detroit 3 and the UAW shows the benefits of collective bargaining in a democratic society. The parties reached accords in a manner devoid of media hype to serve the interests of their employees, companies and communities. Their agreements impact the livelihoods of hundreds of thousands of workers and affect a large swath of the U.S. economy, with global repercussions. Given recent attacks on unions and collective bargaining, it behooves us to elaborate the benefits of this longstanding and legally sanctioned workplace decision-making process between labor and management."

http://www.mirsnews.com/alert.php?alert_id=2154

Dan WYANT, the director of the Michigan Department of Environmental Quality (MDEQ), is resigning in the wake of criticism about how the state handled elevated lead levels in Flint drinking water.

Gov. Rick SNYDER announced Wyant's resignation in a statement today. Also, in the statement, the Governor said his administration would invite scientists who have been tracking the situation "to be our partners in helping us improve Flint water."

"I want the Flint community to know how very sorry I am that this has happened," Snyder's statement added. "And I want all Michigan citizens to know that we will learn from this experience, because Flint is not the only city that has an aging infrastructure."

On Wyant, Snyder said Wyant offered his resignation, "and I've determined that it's appropriate to accept it."

"I'm also making other personnel changes at MDEQ to address problems cited by the task force," Snyder's statement said.

Those other changes haven't been finalized yet, according to Laura BIEHL, a spokesperson for the Governor.

The news of Wyant's resignation comes as a task force continues to work on a report about the Flint water crisis, which occurred after the city's water source was switched to the Flint River in 2014.

"Although the task force's final report is not yet completed, members have made me aware of some interim findings and corrective steps that I have decided to take immediately in order to restore trust in how the state keeps its citizens safe and informed," Snyder said today. He continued, "We'll continue to work with the community members to make sure we hear and respond to their concerns."

Snyder also noted the he called Flint Mayor Karen WEAVER last week and the two are going to meet soon to discuss other ways the state can offer assistance.

Wyant has been MDEQ director since Snyder took office in 2011.

Previously, Wyant was the director of the Department of Agriculture under former Govs. John ENGLER and Jennifer GRANHOLM.

Importance: High

Hello. I need a data file ASAP for the governor's office. I pulled what I need from EEM, but the format is horrendous and I would be structuring for hours (manually).

The attached item from CS is not what they want, but a good attempt. I think they want the following:

All ISD, LEA, PSA and Nonpublic Schools and Programs ACTIVE in Flint (physical entities, not the district, but the schools and ancillary facilities). I need the name of the entity, the physical address, the grades and programs in operation (so they can prioritize using this info). An XML file is attached that I think gets close, but parses out the info I queried line by line. Would take hours to physically manipulate.

Hi Tom,

I believe Maggie from DEQ left you a voicemail on this, but the Governors office needs some data CEPI provided on Flint Schools broken down in greater detail. This is time-sensitive and related to discussions involving the Flint water situation that are happening at a fast pace. Can you please assist?

Hi Caroline,

We can pull a mailing list for you with this information. Could you please specify what is meant by "Flint area"? We can search by county, city, or zip code, and we would need to know exactly which regions should be included in the search.

Thank you,

Subject: FW: Time sensitive-Flint Schools Data
Importance: High

Hello. I need a data file ASAP for the governor's office. I pulled what I need from EEM, but the format is horrendous and I would be structuring for hours (manually).

The attached item from CS is not what they want, but a good attempt. I think they want the following:

All ISD, LEA, PSA and Nonpublic Schools and Programs ACTIVE in Flint (physical entities, not the district, but the schools and ancillary facilities). I need the name of the entity, the physical address, the grades and programs in operation (so they can prioritize using this info). An XML file is attached that I think gets close, but parses out the info I queried line by line. Would take hours to physically manipulate.

Hi Tom,

I believe Maggie from DEQ left you a voicemail on this, but the Governors office needs some data CEPI provided on Flint Schools broken down in greater detail. This is time-sensitive and related to discussions involving the Flint water situation that are happening at a fast pace. Can you please assist?

Hi Caroline,

We can pull a mailing list for you with this information. Could you please specify what is meant by "Flint area"? We can search by county, city, or zip code, and we would need to know exactly which regions should be included in the search.

Thank you,

Helena

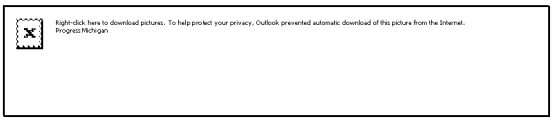
Subject: Lead Poisoning = Prison Time?



Cheryl,

In November, we were the first to call on the U.S. Attorney's Office to investigate the Snyder administration's responsibility for the Flint water crisis. Together, we've repeated that call in the days and weeks since.

Today that call was answered.

The U.S. Attorney's Office just announced that federal prosecutors are investigating the Flint water crisis – meaning that Snyder officials could finally be held accountable in the lead-poisoning thousands of Flint children and residents.

Let that sink in: because of your determination, Snyder administration officials could face meaningful sanctions for their actions. Today's announcement means we are one step closer to real accountability for the Flint water disaster and real justice for victims and their families.

Now we need to keep up the pressure to make sure that anyone found criminally negligible is held criminally responsible. Chip in $10 toward our Flint accountability work today.

Thousands of Flint residents, including children, were poisoned as a result of Snyder administration failures. The effects of lead poisoning are irreversible.

Gov. Snyder's failure to hold those responsible accountable confirms that only a federal investigation can bring Flint residents justice. Contribute $10 today to help us keep the pressure at this critical moment.

For a more progressive Michigan,

Lonnie Scott

MICHIGAN NOW SUPPORTS FAIR MICHIGAN

"Michigan National Organization of Women (NOW) has a long history of working for women's rights in our state, and we are excited to announce that we are strengthening our work for equality as a partner in the Fair Michigan Coalition that will work to pass a constitutional amendment to prohibit discrimination on the basis of sex, gender, gender identity or sexual orientation. Why a constitutional amendment? We need it. Women should be treated as full citizens and should have access to all of the protections guaranteed in our state constitution. A constitutional amendment is a clear statement that the people of Michigan believe that the women in our state deserve full equality. It is a stronger guarantee of rights than simply passing a law that can be easily repealed or amended."

Straight-Ticket Voting and Last 2015 Coffee Hour

"This week, I was incredibly disappointed in the decision of our legislative majority to put political posturing over the good of the people of our state when they voted to eliminate straight-ticket voting. I firmly believe that the Michigan Legislature should be working to making voting easier for people, not more cumbersome. Straight-ticket voting has been a practice in Michigan for over a century, and it is a right that tens of thousands of Democrats and Republicans choose to use every election. The current option to cast straight-ticket ballot makes voting easier, less time consuming, and as a result, encourages greater participation in elections."

Press Release

FOR IMMEDIATE RELEASE: October 5, 2015

Water filters available for MDHHS clients, all Flint residents beginning Tuesday

LANSING, Mich. – Free water filters will be available to current Michigan Department of Health and Human Services clients and Flint residents at four locations beginning Tuesday, October 6, at 9 a.m. through a partnership between the MDHHS and the Genesee County Community Action Resource Department. Free National Sanitation Foundation certified water filters are being provided to Flint residents as part of the administration's comprehensive approach to addressing water concerns in the area.

Current MDHHS clients are encouraged to visit either the 125 E. Union St. or 4809 Clio Road MDHHS office location to obtain a free, certified home water filter. Residents who are not currently enrolled in MDHHS assistance programs should visit the Genesee County Community Action Resource Department offices located at 2727 Lippincott and 601 North Saginaw in Flint. Staff will be onsite at all four locations from 9 a.m. to 4 p.m., Monday through Friday, to distribute filters and assist residents who have questions about proper installation.

"Ensuring that families in the Flint area have access to resources that will help reduce the potential for lead exposure is our top priority," said Nick Lyon, director of the MDHHS. "I want to thank our partners who have mobilized to make water filters available – a point that highlights the importance of continued collaboration at the local, state and federal level as we move forward."

MDHHS clients in the city of Flint who are active Family Independence Program (FIP), Food Assistance Program (FAP), Child Development and Care (CDC), State Disability Assistance (SDA), or Social Security Insurance (SSI) recipients should bring valid identification and a copy of their water bill to their local MDHHS office to receive their filter free of charge. Flint residents who are not active MDHHS clients should bring identification and their water bill to the GCCARD location.

Although blood lead levels throughout the city of Flint have remained steady, last week, MDHHS data was found to be consistent with a recent Hurley Children's Hospital study indicating increased blood lead levels in children residing in two Flint ZIP codes after a 2014 change in water source. While lead paint remains the number one cause of lead poisoning in Michigan, the recent data prompted MDHHS to take action to reduce potential lead exposures through water sources.

MDHHS is urging parents in Flint and throughout the state to do their part in preventing elevated blood lead levels in children. For more information about steps you can take now, visit www.michigan.gov/lead, or contact your local health department. For updates on Flint water and available resources, visit www.michigang.gov/flintwater.

State offering extended, weekend hours for water filter distribution at Lippincott GCCARD

Nearly 5,000 NSF certified filters issued by MDHHS to Flint residents since Monday

LANSING, Mich. – Flint residents and Michigan Department of Health and Human Services clients with a city of Flint water bill will now be able to take advantage of extended hours this Thursday, Friday, and Saturday at the Genesee County Community Action Resource Department 2727 Lippincott location. Extended hours will be offered at the Lippincott facility only, and will run until 7 p.m. on Thursday and Friday, and from 10 a.m. to 2 p.m. on Saturday. The other three locations will maintain 9 a.m. to 4 p.m. operating hours, Monday through Friday, for filter pick up.

Dr. Eden Wells, MDHHS chief medical executive, reemphasized that the Brita SAFF-100 filters being distributed by the department and GCCARD do meet the NSF/ANSI 53 standards for drinking water treatment units.

“The Brita faucet filtration system that we are distributing to residents are National Sanitation Foundation certified to reduce lead in drinking water,” said Dr. Eden Wells. “When connected appropriately, these filters improve water quality by filtering out contaminates including lead, chlorine, benzene and other chemicals.”

Since Monday when MDHHS announced that free water filters would be distributed at four Flint locations, the state and GCCARD have partnered to issue approximately 5,000 free NSF certified water filters to residents that are on the city of Flint water system. The distribution of filters is part of the administration's comprehensive approach to addressing water concerns in the area. These NSF certified water filters remove lead in the water administered through water taps in homes.

MDHHS clients and residents with a city of Flint water bill may take advantage of the extended hours at the Lippincott GCCARD. During the regular business hours, MDHHS clients are encouraged to visit either the 125 E. Union St. or 4809 Clio Road MDHHS office location; residents on Flint water who are not currently enrolled in MDHHS assistance programs should visit the GCCARD offices at 2727 Lippincott and 601 North Saginaw. Staff will be onsite at all four locations to distribute filters and assist residents who have questions about proper installation.

MDHHS clients in the city of Flint who are active recipients should bring valid identification and a copy of their water bill to their local MDHHS office. Flint residents who are not active MDHHS clients should bring identification and their city of Flint water bill to a GCCARD location.

MDHHS is urging all residents do their part to prevent elevated blood lead levels in children. For more information on prevention, visit www.michigan.gov/lead, or contact your local health department. For updates on Flint water and resources, visit www.michigan.gov/flintwater.

MDHHS releases latest data outlining blood lead levels in Flint

Follow-up care, case management resources continue for families

LANSING, Mich. – Preliminary data indicates that 30 of 1,361 adults and children tested in Flint since October 1 had elevated blood lead levels, according to a report issued today by the Michigan Department of Health and Human Services.

This marks the first summary report on lead testing called for in the state's action plan related to health concerns about Flint's water infrastructure.

"Our goal is to help families reduce their exposure to lead sources," said Dr. Eden Wells, MDHHS chief medical executive. "We have made progress in testing and identifying those with elevated blood lead levels, and the department will continue to work closely with the Genesee County Health Department to reach these families. We will remain diligent in our ongoing outreach and education efforts."

Information comes from tests administered citywide to 1,361 children and adults since October 1. Tests showed that 21 of 969 children age 17 or younger and 9 of 392 adults over the age 18 were identified with elevated blood lead levels.

The report covers test results reported to MDHHS since the state action plan was put in place Oct.

2. It includes the number of tests and number of elevated blood lead levels greater than 5 micrograms per deciliter, and captures both capillary and venous blood tests that have been reported to MDHHS since the beginning of October. People who have had multiple tests are counted only once. Five micrograms per deciliter is the level that the Centers for Disease Control and Prevention considers elevated and triggers health care professional follow up with families.

The full report is posted online at www.michigan.gov/flintwater and will be updated as more data becomes available.

When reviewing historical trend data, the risk of lead exposure is highest during the third quarter of each year – July through September. Seasonal variation is the result of a number of factors including increased exposure to lead in dust and soil in the summer months.

In the third quarter of 2010, 8.3 percent of Flint children 6 and under showed elevated blood lead levels. The figure gradually decreased to 4.1 percent in the third quarter of 2013. During the same months in 2014, the figure increased to 7.5 percent and decreased to 6.4 percent in the third quarter of 2015.

Last month, MDHHS collaborated with the county health department and local partners to distribute educational resources and informational letters to Flint parents regarding lead testing. The state is providing funding for GCHD nurses to work with families when an elevated blood lead level has been detected. During these follow-up visits, nurses coordinate with environmental health investigators to meet with families in their homes to identify lead exposures, address questions and provide water filters. People can be exposed to lead from paint, soil, plumbing and other sources.

MDHHS continues to provide free water filters and replacement cartridges to Flint residents at four locations, including the MDHHS Flint offices and the Genesee County Community Action Resource Department. For a full list of locations and hours of distribution, visit www.michigan.gov/flintwater.

To help residents properly install water filters, and to demonstrate how to replace the original when it expires, MDHHS has created an instructional video on its YouTube channel. For updates, visit www.michigan.gov/flintwater.

MDHHS releases latest round of Flint blood lead level data

LANSING, Mich. – The Michigan Department of Health and Human Services today issued its newest summary report on lead testing in Flint. According to preliminary data, 39 of 1,836 adults and children tested had elevated blood lead levels since Oct. 1.

"As testing continues, our focus remains on helping families reduce all potential exposures to lead," said Dr. Eden Wells, MDHHS chief medical executive. "We are working closely with the Genesee County Health Department to provide information and offer tools in the community, and encourage families to explore the resources that are available to them."

Both capillary and venous blood tests are included in the report, and people who have had multiple tests are counted only once. Tests and their results cover the time since the state action plan was put in place on Oct. 2, and capture the number of elevated blood lead levels greater than 5 micrograms per deciliter.

MDHHS is working closely with local partners to offer resources and distribute important lead testing and prevention information. Additional state funding has allowed for Genesee County Health Department (GCHD) nurses to work with families when an elevated blood lead level is detected. These families can also choose to have the nurse coordinate an environmental health investigation in their home to identify lead exposures, which could be lead from paint, soil, plumbing, and other sources.

To support these efforts, the state is coordinating with its Medicaid health plans and provider communities on enhanced screening and testing. In addition to mandated testing at ages one and two for the Medicaid population, MDHHS has recommended blood lead testing for any child younger than six years of age in Flint who has not previously been tested. The state, in coordination with GCHD, developed and issued a Health Alert Network (HAN) notification for local providers to help ensure consistent messaging and protocols among primary care providers.

Free water filters and replacement cartridges are still available to Flint residents. For a full list of locations and hours of distribution, or to view the full blood lead level report, visit www.michigan.gov/flintwater. The summary will be updated as more data becomes available.

To help residents properly install water filters, and to demonstrate how to replace the original when it expires, MDHHS has created an instructional video on its YouTube channel. For this and other updates, visit www.michigan.gov/flintwater.

Updated summary report on Flint blood lead level data now available

LANSING, Mich. – The Michigan Department of Health and Human Services today issued its bi-weekly summary report on lead testing in Flint. Preliminary data indicate that 43 of 2,182 adults and children tested had elevated blood lead levels since Oct. 1.

"In partnership with the Genesee County Health Department, we are working to engage and provide resources to residents to reduce all potential exposures to lead," said Dr. Eden Wells, MDHHS chief medical executive. "Case management and home lead analysis are available for families in which an elevated blood lead level has been detected."

The first MDHHS summary report on blood lead levels in Flint was issued Dec. 3, 2015. Updated reports are posted on a bi-weekly basis on the www.michigan.gov/flintwater website. After refining our methods to identify age, some people are now counted in a different age group than on previous reports. The total counts for each year have not changed.

The report includes both capillary and venous blood tests, and people who have had multiple tests are counted only once. Tests and their results cover the time since the state action plan was put in place on Oct. 2, and capture the number of elevated blood lead levels greater than 5 micrograms per deciliter.

MDHHS, together with the Genesee County Health Department (GCHD), is working with local partners to distribute educational information around lead testing and prevention. Supplemental state dollars are funding GCHD nurses to work with families when an elevated blood lead level is detected.

Families with an elevated blood lead level can also choose to have a nurse coordinate an environmental health investigation in their home to help identify lead exposures, which could be lead from paint, soil, plumbing, and other sources. Families with questions about their blood lead levels or test results are also encouraged to contact their primary care physician or local health department.

In addition to mandated testing at ages one and two for the Medicaid population, MDHHS is coordinating with its Medicaid health plans and provider communities to recommend blood lead testing for any child younger than six years of age in Flint who has not previously been tested. The state, in coordination with GCHD, developed and issued a Health Alert Network (HAN) notification for local providers to help ensure consistent messaging and protocols among primary care providers.

Free water filters and replacement cartridges are available to Flint residents. For a full list of locations and hours of distribution, or to view the full blood lead level report, visit www.michigan.gov/flintwater. The summary will be updated as more data becomes available.

To help residents properly install water filters, and to demonstrate how to replace the original when it expires, MDHHS has created an instructional video on its YouTube channel. For this and other updates, visit www.michigan.gov/flintwater.

The corrected version notes that it was Rep. Collene Lamonte (D-Montague) that discussed her personal experience with foreclosure, not Rep. So-Called Main Street Fairness Bills Stalled By Dems

Bills that would force the collection of the sales and use tax on purchases made through online entities that have affiliations in the state were on the House Tax Policy Committee agenda Wednesday, but were not voted on because House Democrats on the committee were going to abstain from voting.

{ HYPERLINK "http://www.gongwer.com/index.cfm?link=bio.cfm&nameid=268601&locid=1" } (R-Utica), chair of the committee, said he thought the bills ({ HYPERLINK "http://www.gongwer.com/index.cfm?link=legislation_billdetail.cfm&billid=2013HB420201" } and { HYPERLINK "http://www.gongwer.com/index.cfm?link=legislation_billdetail.cfm&billid=2013HB420301" }) had enough votes to be reported from committee. But Mr. Farrington said he found out before the meeting on Wednesday that the Democrats on the committee were planning on abstaining from the vote.

Mr. Farrington said he did not know why the Democratic committee members decided to pass, and he said it could possibly have been for "political reasons."

He also said plans for moving the bills are up in the air, since it does not have the votes to be reported from committee.

{ HYPERLINK "http://www.gongwer.com/index.cfm?link=bio.cfm&nameid=211501&locid=1" } (D-Warren), a member of the committee, said it wasn't a last minute decision and the Democratic members simply feel the issue is a federal one.

Mr. Switalski said the U.S. Senate has passed bills requiring internet retailers to charge the sales and use tax, and he said the U.S. House is "poised" to do so as well.

However, those watching the issue said it seemed Democrats were leveraging their votes in hopes of winning Republican support on other issues.

Officials Announce $4M To Address Backlog Of Detroit Rape Kits

{ HYPERLINK "http://www.gongwer.com/index.cfm?link=bio.cfm&nameid=77201&locid=1" } is making available $4 million from money his office has obtained through legal settlements to pay for processing many of the more than 9,000 remaining abandoned, untested rape kits found in a Detroit Police Department property room almost four years ago.

At a news conference that included { HYPERLINK "http://www.gongwer.com/index.cfm?link=bio.cfm&nameid=245801&locid=1" } and Wayne

County Prosecutor Kym Worthy, officials said they could not be sure exactly how many of the kits could be processed for $4 million, but at an average cost of $1,550 per kit, they were hopeful of making a significant dent in the backlog.

"There are people that have been victims that are in these kits that deserve justice," Mr. Snyder said.

Ms. Worthy undertook a private fundraising effort to process about 1,600 of the original 11,303 kits. Through those tests, and many of the kits were no longer testable, 32 serial rapists were identified, Ms. Worthy said.

She praised Mr. Snyder and Ms. Schuette for their efforts. She said more than 100 rapists could be identified as a result of the funding.

"It's bigger than huge," she said.

Ms. Worthy is in the middle of a well-publicized battle with Wayne County Executive Robert Ficano and the County Commission about the size of her budget. She was asked whether her office had the prosecutors available to handle cases stemming from testing the kits and responded that she hoped county officials were listening to the commitment of Mr. Schuette and Mr. Snyder.

"At times when I don't hear very much good news of a financial nature in Wayne County, it was a great day, a fabulous day, when the attorney general called me and said that he was making available funds that will allow thousands more kits to be tested," she said. "That was better news than manna from heaven."

Ms. Worthy said her office already has obtained convictions, a guilty plea and another four with trial dates set from its work on the kits tested so far.

Mr. Schuette said the effort would hopefully provide some healing or closure for the thousands of women who feel abandoned by law enforcement.

"Rape, it's not just another crime. When a woman is violated, attacked, assaulted, brutalized, it cries out for justice," he said. "Twice, women were violated. Once by the rape and then second that justice was put in a box, put on a shelf. That's going to end now with this team effort."

Peters Leads All Potential Republican U.S. Senate Candidates

Democratic { HYPERLINK "http://www.gongwer.com/index.cfm?link=bio.cfm&nameid=7801&locid=1" } leads all possible Republican candidates for the U.S. Senate race in 2014, according to a new poll released Wednesday, although the firm conducting the poll said it was more of a generic ballot test given the lack of familiarity those surveyed had with the candidates.

The only Republican who has announced a bid is former Secretary of State Terri Land, and she performs the best against Mr. Peters, who still led her 41 percent to 36 percent even though more voters recognized Ms. Land's name than Mr. Peters'.

Mr. Peters scores even better against the Republican many in the GOP are hoping will run, { HYPERLINK "http://www.gongwer.com/index.cfm?link=bio.cfm&nameid=3001&locid=1" } of Brighton. Mr. Peters held a 42 percent to 32 percent lead in that match-up.

Against { HYPERLINK "http://www.gongwer.com/index.cfm?link=bio.cfm&nameid=204901&locid=1" } (R-Kentwood), Mr. Peters held a 42-30 lead.

Other Republicans considering a bid, like state { HYPERLINK "http://www.gongwer.com/index.cfm?link=bio.cfm&nameid=84601&locid=1" } of Saginaw Township and physician Rob Steele, trail Mr. Peters by the same 44-26 margin. Former Republican Party Chair Saul Anuzis was further back at 44-24.

The poll was conducted by Public Policy Polling, a Democratic firm with a good track record for accurate polling in Michigan. Holland Mayor Kurt Dykstra, who says he is considering a bid, was not tested in the survey.

"Peters' strength in these early match-ups has less to do with him than it does the general Democratic lean of the state in national elections," Public Policy Polling said in a memo about the survey.

Eighteen percent of those polled had a favorable opinion of Mr. Peters compared to 16 percent unfavorable, leaving 66 percent with no opinion. Ms. Land, who won statewide office twice, in 2002 and 2006, registered a 29 percent favorable rating and 21 percent unfavorable.

Looking deeper into the poll, there were some encouraging numbers for Ms. Land if she faces competition for the Republican nomination. Forty-two percent of Republicans had a favorable opinion of her compared to 11 percent unfavorable - by far the best spread of any other potential candidate. Mr. Rogers had a split of 27-12 among Republicans, and { HYPERLINK "http://www.gongwer.com/index.cfm?link=bio.cfm&nameid=204901&locid=1" } (R-Kentwood) had an anemic 15 percent favorable to 16 percent unfavorable rating among Republicans.

In a Land-Peters general election match-up, Mr. Peters' five-point edge comes from the greater number of Democrats voting. The two are statistically tied among independents with Ms. Land at 32 percent and Mr. Peters at 31 percent.

The survey was conducted via automated telephone interviews May 30 through June 2 among 697 Michigan voters. It has an error margin of plus or minus 3.7 percentage points. The poll conducted used an oversample of 334 Republicans for a question on whom the party would most like to see as its nominee with opinions varied.

And on that question, there was less enthusiasm for Ms. Land.

Twenty-one percent said they wanted { HYPERLINK "http://www.gongwer.com/index.cfm?link=bio.cfm&nameid=1401&locid=1" } of Midland to run, although he has said he is not running. Eighteen percent named Mr. Rogers, who is considering the contest, while 16 percent chose Mr. Amash, 15 percent Ms. Land, 7 percent Mr. Anuzis, 2 percent Circuit Judge Kimberly Small and Mr. Steele and Mr. Kahn at 1 percent each. The error margin for that question was plus or minus 5.4 percentage points.

Mike Murray, a Republican political consultant, said the poll is a positive for Ms. Land. Mr. Peters spent big money in his three congressional campaigns and has had the field to himself for some time, but she is barely outside the margin of error against him

Mr. Murray, who is not working for anyone in the race, said he was somewhat surprised that Ms. Land fared better against Mr. Peters than Mr. Rogers or Mr. Amash. He noted she will need to raise big money and avoid a bruising primary to position herself.

"I think she stacks up very well with Gary Peters," he said.

Democrats, however, were less than concerned, noting that 85 percent of Republicans suggested they preferred someone other than Ms. Land as their nominee.

Senate Passes Legislation Barring Mandatory Paid Sick Leave

The Senate on Wednesday passed, mostly along party lines, a bill prohibiting local governments from establishing their own laws on employee leave for employers in their jurisdiction, with Democrats calling the bill unnecessary and one of the worst bills they had ever seen.

{ HYPERLINK "http://www.gongwer.com/index.cfm?link=bio.cfm&nameid=155301&locid=1" } (D-Ann Arbor) offered a substitute to { HYPERLINK "http://www.gongwer.com/index.cfm?link=legislation_billdetail.cfm&billid=2013SB17301" } that would essentially undo is the legislation by instead requiring employers to give employees paid sick leave time.

"Paid sick leave policies are good public policy and in fact good for business," Ms. Warren said.

{ HYPERLINK "http://www.gongwer.com/index.cfm?link=bio.cfm&nameid=124401&locid=1" } (R-Gaines Township), sponsor of the legislation, of course urged defeat of the substitute. He referenced his son, who had just started his own business and could barely stay afloat as it was, let alone if he were to be required to pay sick time for his employees.

"I believe leave time benefits, paid or unpaid, is an agreement between employer and employee," Mr. Jansen said.

Ms. Warren said the bill would override local control and that the legislation was "a solution in search of a problem," since to her knowledge only four places in the nation - none of which are in Michigan - have implemented such a policy. She also argued that having paid sick leave helped increase worker performance, boost morale and cut down on health care costs.

Mr. Jansen was joined in support by { HYPERLINK "http://www.gongwer.com/index.cfm?link=bio.cfm&nameid=74701&locid=1" } (R-Escanaba), who said one thing that has been missing from the conversation as the bill relates to local control is the issue of private control. He said the government should not be able to make such a decision and force the burden of cost onto employers.

The substitute was defeated along party lines, and the bill was passed 25-13 with { HYPERLINK "http://www.gongwer.com/index.cfm?link=bio.cfm&nameid=79201&locid=1" } (R-Sterling Heights) voting in opposition to the bill alongside Democrats.

{ HYPERLINK "http://www.gongwer.com/index.cfm?link=bio.cfm&nameid=161201&locid=1" } (D-Detroit) called the bill "despicable."

"I come before you today with shame and with anger in my heart in the fact that we would take away sick leave from our workers. This is disgraceful. It's unnecessary. It's despicable," Mr. Young said. "This is the worst idea for a bill I've seen since they decided to make Garfield and the Tale of Two Kitties. This bill is so incredibly bad that I think it would make a tear in the space continuum if I blacked out, woke up in a hot tub time machine, and traveled through time so I could stop it and repeal it."

And some others expressed disgust at the passage of the bill as well.

"I suspect that from where most working people and restaurant patrons sit, these lobbyists look like little more than agents for Mr. Scrooge refusing to allow sick days or a decent wage for workers," Danielle Atkinson, director of Mothering Justice, said in a statement. "Sadly, that's hardly an accurate reflection of many local restaurant owners I know who care about their workers and public health."

And { HYPERLINK "http://www.gongwer.com/index.cfm?link=bio.cfm&nameid=270701&locid=1" } (D-Lathrup Village), who has introduced a bill that would allow workers to take earned paid time off to recover from illnesses, said business and employees both lose when someone comes to work sick.

"A healthy workforce leads to a healthy economy, and this Senate Bill is a step in the wrong direction for Michigan," Mr. Hobbs said in a statement. "As state lawmakers, we need to show we're serious about valuing workers and protecting public health by moving towards a statewide policy for all municipalities."

DIA Protection Legislation Waits For Senate Vote, Faces Uncertain Fate In House

The Senate on Wednesday did not take up a bill that would protect the Detroit Institute of Arts' artwork from liquidation should the city of Detroit file for bankruptcy, despite having placed the item on its calendar as intended for final passage.

Senate { HYPERLINK "http://www.gongwer.com/index.cfm?link=bio.cfm&nameid=55701&locid=1" } (R-Monroe) said he expects his legislation, { HYPERLINK "http://www.gongwer.com/index.cfm?link=legislation_billdetail.cfm&billid=2013SB40101" }, will instead be taken up next week. He said there was a degree of complexity to the legislation since it dealt with a law that began in 1885 and had changes made to it.

"(It was the) first time we had talked about it as a caucus so I told them I'd give them a little extra time (and) we would talk again Tuesday," Mr. Richardville said after session. "There's no event there, it's just that it was moving pretty fast and I thought I had a few questions for clarifying. I don't think there will be a problem with the vote on Tuesday."

Indeed, the bill was just introduced last week and reported from the Senate Government Operations Committee on Tuesday. The bill would require an art institute to adhere to the code of ethics for museums as published by the American Alliance for Museums or a successor organization, and specifically a provision that the institute could not sell items from the museum collection unless doing so would to the direct benefit of the institute itself.

The potential caveat helping the case of saving that artwork is that while the city of Detroit owns the DIA and the art within the facility, technically substantial aid comes from people and groups all across the state. And some of that artwork comes from those private parties, too.

If and when the bill clears the Senate, it is unknown how well it will fare in the House. Ari Adler, spokesperson for House { HYPERLINK "http://www.gongwer.com/index.cfm?link=bio.cfm&nameid=226901&locid=1" } (R-Marshall), said the speaker currently does not have any plans to take the bill up before summer recess over a couple of concerns.

"One, we want to try to stay focused right now on keeping Detroit out of bankruptcy," Mr. Adler said. "And the second thing is the speaker is concerned that if you start talking about things that cannot be touched, before long that list starts to include everything."

"That has been a problem for cities like Detroit for many years now," he said. "People say that changes need to be made but don't change the thing that I really like. When you do that, you end up running out solutions."

And { HYPERLINK "http://www.gongwer.com/index.cfm?link=bio.cfm&nameid=245801&locid=1" } was noncommittal on Mr. Richardville's bill when pressed about it at a separate news conference on Wednesday.

"Looking at the legislation, it was just recently introduced," he said of the bill. "I'm happy to review it as part of the process."

Mr. Snyder also declined to say whether he thought a state statute could protect the art from a federal bankruptcy judge.

"My goal is not to see the art of the DIA disappear," he said. "This is a fabulous asset of the city of Detroit. It's very important."

Anger Clear As House Panel Hears Foreclosure Bills

As the House Financial Services Committee took testimony on a series of bills that would shorten the redemption period homeowners in foreclosure can use to get their house sold or work out a final arrangement to prevent losing their house, it was clear the overflowing crowd watching the meeting was opposed to the measures.

Critics said the bills will increase the number of foreclosures, while supporters said they would help neighborhoods by moving properties to new owners more quickly and help lenders from losing money on damaged homes.

{ HYPERLINK "http://www.gongwer.com/index.cfm?link=bio.cfm&nameid=284701&locid=1" } (R-Nashville), chair of the committee, had to repeatedly ask audience members not to applaud speakers they agreed with or to shout out criticisms of speakers with whom they disagreed.

The panel did not vote on { HYPERLINK "http://www.gongwer.com/index.cfm?link=legislation_billdetail.cfm&billid=2013HB476401" } , { HYPERLINK "http://www.gongwer.com/index.cfm?link=legislation_billdetail.cfm&billid=2013HB476501" } , { HYPERLINK "http://www.gongwer.com/index.cfm?link=legislation_billdetail.cfm&billid=2013HB476601" } and HB 4766. The Senate Banking and Financial Institutions Committee did vote out similar legislation to the full Senate two weeks ago.

Mr. Callton also did not say when the committee would next meet on the package.

But when he adjourned the meeting for the beginning of the House session at 1:30 p.m., several audience members angrily demanded they be allowed to speak.

"What kind of audacity is this?" shouted Jerry Goldberg, a Detroit-based, anti-foreclosure attorney, saying people had come from a great distance to speak at the meeting.

The committee meeting lasted for some 90 minutes, and when the meeting had gone on for nearly 45 minutes, Mr. Callton said there were 35 people left to speak.

The meeting was also marked by the somewhat surprising acknowledgement of { HYPERLINK "http://www.gongwer.com/index.cfm?link=bio.cfm&nameid=325401&locid=1" } (D-Montague), who said she had been through a foreclosure and was critical of banks taking too long to work with them, in one case letting a short sale of her house slip away (editor's note: this story corrected from an earlier edition to reflect that it was Ms. Lamonte that made this comment, not { HYPERLINK "http://www.gongwer.com/index.cfm?link=bio.cfm&nameid=269101&locid=1" } (D-Fraser) who was erroneously identified in the earlier edition).

The legislation is identical to the Senate bills ({ HYPERLINK "http://www.gongwer.com/index.cfm?link=legislation_billdetail.cfm&billid=2013SB38001" }, { HYPERLINK "http://www.gongwer.com/index.cfm?link=legislation_billdetail.cfm&billid=2013SB38101" }, { HYPERLINK "http://www.gongwer.com/index.cfm?link=legislation_billdetail.cfm&billid=2013SB38201" } and { HYPERLINK "http://www.gongwer.com/index.cfm?link=legislation_billdetail.cfm&billid=2013SB38301" }). When the Senate panel met on the bills, that committee too was packed, but with more officials who work with legislation and foreclosures. The House meeting was marked in part because a number of home owners who had faced foreclosure were present.

{ HYPERLINK "http://www.gongwer.com/index.cfm?link=bio.cfm&nameid=95101&locid=1" } (R-Evart), chair of the Senate committee and sponsor of one of the bills, said the package, which would extend the current 90-day period that lenders and homeowners have to work on resolutions before beginning the foreclosure process, but cut the current six months redemption period to 60 days, was the "right policy" for the state.

Banking officials supported the measure, with several saying they have never seen a house issue resolved during redemption (a spokesperson with the Michigan Bankers Association said the average is about 1 percent of houses in foreclosure can work out a resolution in redemption).

Plus, supporters said homes are often abandoned, with fixtures stolen or destroyed, during the redemption period and there is nothing they can do about it.

But Lorray Brown with the Michigan Poverty Law Program said state law now allows a lender to seize property if it has been abandoned.

And Neeta Delaney of the Michigan Foreclosure Task Force said 60 days in redemption would not be enough time for most lenders and home owners to work out a short sale.

Sam Frangie of the Lansing-based LAFCU said short sales through his institution generally take 60 days. He also said he has never had a situation where a foreclosure was redeemed.

Baxter Jones of Detroit seemed to encapsulate the overall opposition when he said, "Everyone wants to protect the banks." Instead, he said, the Legislature should pass bills to help people stay in their homes.

{ HYPERLINK "http://www.gongwer.com/index.cfm?link=bio.cfm&nameid=217401&locid=1" } (D-Detroit), minority vice chair of the committee, released a statement in opposition to the bills.

"In order for Michigan's economy to make a full recovery, we should be doing everything we can to help our citizens get back on their feet," Mr. Nathan said. "The reduction in redemption periods is unconscionable. It's wrong to dump residents on the street before allowing them a fair chance to make other living arrangements."

Approps Members Chastise DHS Over Adoption Spending

Some House Appropriations Committee members were a bit hot under the collar Wednesday for having to approve a $25.3 million supplemental to allow the Department of Human Services to pay an increase for adoption subsidies.

The issue was not providing the additional $3 per child per day, but that they were not told there was a problem until the supplemental legislation ({ HYPERLINK "http://www.gongwer.com/index.cfm?link=legislation_billdetail.cfm&billid=2013HB411201" }) was put on their desks.

Most of the outrage came from committee Democrats, but { HYPERLINK "http://www.gongwer.com/index.cfm?link=bio.cfm&nameid=205901&locid=1" } (R-Holland), the committee chair, agreed that the department needed some process to notify the Legislature that it was having unexpected budget problems.

The conflict came as the result of the $3 increase that had been included in the current year budget. The intention had been to provide the increase only to certain new foster care and adoption cases, which would have cost about $1.5 million. But department officials discovered that law required them to provide the increase to all current adoption cases, about 27,000 of them, bringing the total needed to about $28 million.

{ HYPERLINK "http://www.gongwer.com/index.cfm?link=bio.cfm&nameid=217601&locid=1" } (D-Detroit) said the department should have raised the issue earlier. "Instead of coming to the Legislature and saying we made a mistake ... you're coming to us and saying we need $28 million to cover up the mistake," she said.

Had officials raised the issue earlier, the statute could have been changed to allow the increases to be applied as intended, she said. And she said department officials, particularly Director Maura Corrigan, should have apologized for allowing the mistake.

Amanda Bright McClanahan, budget director for the department, said Ms. Corrigan had apologized in meetings with legislative leaders. "She has taken full responsibility for the fact that the rate increase was implemented without notification to the Legislature," Ms. Bright McClanahan said. "This was something that was missed by the department, the Legislature and the Executive Branch during the budget process last year."

She said the increase, to all cases, is included in the fiscal year 2013-14 budget. And she said the department had taken steps to prevent such situations in the future.

Ms. Bright McClanahan said the department would not necessarily have supported changing the law to allow increases only to new foster care cases. "If there's a disparity between foster care and adoption, there's a disincentive for foster families to move to adoption," she said, adding that the children involved in the cases were special needs and the incentives were needed to get them into permanent families.

The issue, Ms. Tlaib said, was this was the second time the department had changed its spending without notifying the Legislature. The first time, she said, was the department's decision not to implement the JET program despite it being included in the budget.

And { HYPERLINK "http://www.gongwer.com/index.cfm?link=bio.cfm&nameid=280501&locid=1" } (D-Grand Rapids) said the department had to be sure that, at a minimum, all Appropriations members were included in any communications about budget problems. "Private communication to the leadership is not communication to the entire Legislature," he said.

Members also chafed at the department saying it had a legal opinion finding the payments were required, but would not supply that opinion to the Legislature because it was informal and so covered by attorney-client privilege.

The committee rejected amendments from Ms. Tlaib that would have required the department to find the additional funds, as well as funds for a proposed departmental restructuring, from within its current budget rather than providing additional funds.

Ms. Tlaib also offered language, again rejected, that would have required the department to come up with the funds for some additional Family Independence Program cases generated by a court ruling that the department had improperly removed some families. Most of those families were on only a few months before they were again removed under the federal time limit for cash assistance, Ms. Bright McClanahan said.

Mr. Haveman ruled out of order a motion from { HYPERLINK "http://www.gongwer.com/index.cfm?link=bio.cfm&nameid=31101&locid=1" } (D-Detroit) for Mr. Haveman to draft a letter to the department on behalf of the committee, but Mr. Haveman said he would work with Mr. Durhal on such a letter if one had not already been sent to the department.

The bill, as reported on an 18-0 vote with all Democrats abstaining, represented a $637.5 million gross reduction in the current year budget. General Fund was down $25 million.

The bulk of the bill was a $625.88 million gross reduction for DHS and a $157.24 gross reduction for the Department of Community Health to adjust for expected caseload reductions. Another $15.95 million, this all federal funds, came out of the Department of Education for child care subsidy caseload reductions.

Among some other provisions, the bill included $1 million General Fund for the Department of Agriculture and Rural Development, half to cover shortfalls in food inspection program fees and half to cover bovine tuberculosis testing.

The Department of Education would pass through $350,000 to Marshall Public Schools as it takes on high school students from Albion Public Schools next year. Officials said the funds would cover an expected lag in federal at-risk funds for the receiving district, noting that Marshall could end up with less at-risk money than Albion depending on its final percentage of at-risk students once the transfer is completed.

Democrats on the committee questioned why similar funds could not have been made available for Buena Vista Public Schools when that district ran out of money last month.

The $1.8 million to the Unemployment Insurance Agency to hire additional fraud inspectors drew fire from both sides of the aisle, with members complaining about the agency's treatment of both businesses and employees.

Stephanie Comai, deputy director in the Department of Licensing and Regulatory Affairs, which houses UIA, said the agency prides itself in customer service, but also always has room to improve. To allegations that the agency is allowing workers to collect thousands of dollars in benefits before filing fraud complaints and requiring repayment, with fees, she said UIA cannot withhold payments until a complaint has been resolved. She said the inspectors were intended to reduce the backlog in cases and reduce the period where improper benefits are being paid.

The bill also allowed the Department of Corrections to spend $2.48 million from Detroit for the Mound Correctional Facility, which is being converted to a detention center. The state is paying $450,000 for some upgrades, including security cameras, but the city is expected to reimburse those costs once it begins operating the facility, officials said.

DHS would also see another $26.19 million in federal funds for retirement costs. Officials said those costs increased faster than projected (the line had generated lapses in prior fiscal years).

Transit in Detroit would see two boosts: $5.4 million in Comprehensive Transportation Fund to make up for expected reductions in support from Detroit for local transit and $10 million in federal funds for a variety of transportation improvements, mostly around the Eastern Market.

The committee rejected an amendment to expand Medicaid as allowed under the federal Patient Protection and Affordable Care Act. That provision had been pushed by { HYPERLINK "http://www.gongwer.com/index.cfm?link=bio.cfm&nameid=245801&locid=1" } but was left out of the 2013-14 budget.

The committee also reported two bills ({ HYPERLINK "http://www.gongwer.com/index.cfm?link=legislation_billdetail.cfm&billid=2013HB466601" } and { HYPERLINK "http://www.gongwer.com/index.cfm?link=legislation_billdetail.cfm&billid=2013HB470801" }) that would extend the hazardous waste management fee through the end of the 2013-14 fiscal year and combine three restricted funds dealing with hazardous waste into a single fund.

It also reported { HYPERLINK "http://www.gongwer.com/index.cfm?link=legislation_billdetail.cfm&billid=2013HB467001" } to allow the Department of State Police to use funds set aside under the Emergency Management Act and { HYPERLINK

"http://www.gongwer.com/index.cfm?link=legislation_billdetail.cfm&billid=2013HB467101" } to eliminate the sunset on the e911 fee.

House Oks Bill Allowing Retired Corrections Officers To Work Indefinitely

The full House narrowly passed a bill on Wednesday that would remove the September 30 sunset date in legislation enacted last year that allows the Department of Corrections to hire retirees to work part time to reduce overtime costs.

The bill ({ HYPERLINK "http://www.gongwer.com/index.cfm?link=legislation_billdetail.cfm&billid=2013HB466401" }) passed 58-51 on mostly party lines. Republicans { HYPERLINK "http://www.gongwer.com/index.cfm?link=bio.cfm&nameid=276301&locid=1" } of Clayton and { HYPERLINK "http://www.gongwer.com/index.cfm?link=bio.cfm&nameid=268601&locid=1" } of Utica joined the 49 Democrats in opposing the bill. { HYPERLINK "http://www.gongwer.com/index.cfm?link=bio.cfm&nameid=228901&locid=1" } (I-Detroit) voted yes.

The legislation is designed to help the department save money in its ever-growing budget. By removing the sunset, supporters said it would help get more retirees working while the department is in the process of training new workers.

HUNTING, ORV FEES: { HYPERLINK "http://www.gongwer.com/index.cfm?link=legislation_billdetail.cfm&billid=2013HB466801" } and { HYPERLINK "http://www.gongwer.com/index.cfm?link=legislation_billdetail.cfm&billid=2013HB466901" } passed 77-32 and 70-39, respectively. The latter would raise fees for off-road vehicles by $10 to $26.25 for a general license. For those who wish to ride on state trails, the license would be $36.25.

Hunters would see a price increase and a change in their licenses as well. They would have to get a base license and additional licenses for certain species. It would cost $10 for a resident base license and $150 for nonresidents. Junior hunters would pay $5 and seniors would pay $4 for a base license. A person would be allowed to hunt small game with a base license.

To hunt deer, the hunter must pay another $20 for the deer license. An elk license would be an additional $100.

The cost of 24-hour and 72-hour fishing licenses increase to $10 from $7 and to $28 from $21, respectively, under the bill. But fees for a resident all-species fishing licenses would decrease to $25 from $28. Nonresident, all-species fishing licenses increase to $75 from $42.

House Panel Reports Veteran Property Tax Exemption

The House Tax Policy Committee reported bills on Wednesday that would extend the property tax exemption so that it would also apply to the principal residence of veterans who have been permanently and totally disabled as the result of military service and are entitled to veterans' benefits at the 100 percent rate.

The bills ({ HYPERLINK "http://www.gongwer.com/index.cfm?link=legislation_billdetail.cfm&billid=2013HB469801" }, { HYPERLINK "http://www.gongwer.com/index.cfm?link=legislation_billdetail.cfm&billid=2013HB411001" } and { HYPERLINK "http://www.gongwer.com/index.cfm?link=legislation_billdetail.cfm&billid=2013SB35201" }) are all very similar and were reported unanimously from committee.

{ HYPERLINK "http://www.gongwer.com/index.cfm?link=bio.cfm&nameid=204001&locid=1" } (D-Farmington Hills) won an amendment for SB 352 that would include language from the other bills in the package ensuring that once a veteran's spouse remarried, he or she would no longer receive the exemption.

Samantha Harkins, representing the Michigan Municipal League, said the league is opposed to the bills simply because it is a piece-meal solution. Ms. Harkins said the Legislature could possibly develop a broader and more comprehensive statewide policy to address what veterans are lacking in services.

Ms. Harkins said property taxes are where local units of government get most of their revenue.

BUSINESS TAX LIABILITY: A bill that would make an officer, manager or partner of a business personally liable only for uncollected trust taxes, or taxes collected from the business for the government, such as sales tax, was also discussed in the House Tax Policy Committee.

The bill ({ HYPERLINK "http://www.gongwer.com/index.cfm?link=legislation_billdetail.cfm&billid=2013SB6401" }) would limit liability to only situations where a business failed to pay a tax from another person and to a person who had been responsible for collecting the tax or filing returns during the time of default.

Dan Papineau, chief of staff for the bill's sponsor, { HYPERLINK "http://www.gongwer.com/index.cfm?link=bio.cfm&nameid=42701&locid=1" } (R-Harrison Township), said under current law a person could be held liable for certain corporate taxes and the Michigan Business Tax.

Mr. Papineau also said few states collect taxes other than trust taxes from individuals if a business hasn't paid.

The bill also would limit the liability of the person to their proportionate share of the tax assessed and require the Department of Treasury to assess the purchaser of a business that owes taxes before assessing a person involved with the company under previous ownership.

Howard Ryan, with the Department of Treasury, said the department is opposed to the bills. Mr. Ryan said the bill does not define trust taxes, and the department is under the impression sales and use taxes would not be considered a trust tax.

Mr. Ryan also said there are many businesses that owe back taxes, have the funds to pay them and just refuse to do so. He said holding a manager, officer or partner personally liable helps the department collect the taxes.

Mr. Ryan said the department is interested in working on different language for the bill that would define trust taxes and ensure if an individual was not liable, he or she would not have to pay the tax.

However, Mr. Papineau said the department's proposed language would make the situation worse.

The chair of the committee, { HYPERLINK "http://www.gongwer.com/index.cfm?link=bio.cfm&nameid=268601&locid=1" } (R-Utica), said the committee will continue to work on the bill in upcoming weeks.

Disaster Fund Bill Clears Senate Appropriations

Legislation that would ensure a minimum level of $2 million in the Disaster and Emergency Contingency Fund and raise the maximum grant to a local government from it won approval Wednesday from the Senate Appropriations Committee.

The move in { HYPERLINK "http://www.gongwer.com/index.cfm?link=legislation_billdetail.cfm&billid=2013SB33001" } is part of { HYPERLINK "http://www.gongwer.com/index.cfm?link=bio.cfm&nameid=245801&locid=1" }'s 2013-14 budget recommendation and would represent a change from how the state has disbursed disaster aid. Historically, the state has not placed money in what is now called the Disaster Contingency Fund. Instead, the state has handled the disbursement of funds through a supplemental appropriations bill.

Backers of the legislation say it will better prepare the state and make the disbursement of funds much smoother.

Under the bill, a county or municipality could obtain a maximum grant from the fund of $100,000 or 10 percent of the local government's operating budget, whichever is less, up from the current $30,000/10 percent level.

The committee adopted an amendment that would mean a smaller ceiling for the fund than originally proposed. The bill initially called for an $8.5 million cap, but under the amendment the cap would be $4.5 million.

The bill won approval on a party-line 11-4 vote. { HYPERLINK "http://www.gongwer.com/index.cfm?link=bio.cfm&nameid=41301&locid=1" } (D-Taylor) abstained.

Local governments would request funds through the Department of State Police, which would decide whether to grant the funds. The governor must have signed an emergency declaration for the situation as well for it to be eligible for funds.

Medicaid Reform Set To See Changes Next Week

{ HYPERLINK "http://www.gongwer.com/index.cfm?link=bio.cfm&nameid=277701&locid=1" }, chair of the House Michigan Competitiveness Committee, said on Wednesday the bill reforming Medicaid reform would see a substitute on Monday for members of the committee to look through, followed by meetings next Tuesday and Wednesday.

The Michigan Competitiveness Committee heard its fourth day of testimony on the bill ({ HYPERLINK "http://www.gongwer.com/index.cfm?link=legislation_billdetail.cfm&billid=2013HB471401" }) designed to gain waivers from the federal government before the state expands Medicaid to 133 percent of the federal poverty level.

Mr. Shirkey (R-Clarklake) said if all goes well, the committee will be in a position to consider voting next on the legislation next week.

Mark Cook, vice president of governmental affairs for Blue Cross Blue Shield of Michigan, said currently, residents who are uninsured go to the emergency room to receive care, and that is the least cost-effective way to get people care.

He also said BCBSM currently has products in the private marketplace where consumers receive savings for going to the doctor and taking steps to improve their health. He said those products have proven to be successful. In the bill proposed in committee, there are incentives to reduce premiums for those who would newly be accepted into the Medicaid program to get healthier.

Mr. Cook also said the state should take advantage of the federal money given for the expansion because the state will otherwise be required to spend more of its own money.

Doug Paterson, with the Michigan Primary Care Association, said the 14 states that have chosen not to implement the Medicaid expansion have increased rates of uncompensated care and will lose $8.4 billion.

Mr. Paterson also expressed concerns with the 48-month limit on Medicaid coverage in the bill. He said he was worried about a situation where a woman would receive Medicaid benefits, then get pregnant after she reached the limit and no longer qualify. He also said various conditions treated do not go away in four years.

"They are able bodied (right now) because we can treat these issues," he said. "But if they were not treated, they would not be able bodied."

Representatives from Michigan Consumers for Health Care said the group was concerned individuals would be penalized if they lived in an area where transportation was an issue and could not comply with the wellness incentives.

The group also said one-third of health care costs come from fraud and abuse, and those issues should be looked at more.

Members of the small business community, including the Michigan Chamber of Commerce, the Michigan Association of Health Plans and the Small Business Association of Michigan said without the expansion, many of their members would have to pay fees under the Affordable Care Act. They also said the expansion could help bend the cost curve by removing the extra costs from those paying for uncompensated care within their insurance rates.

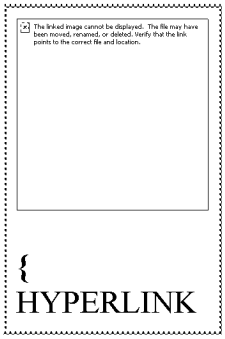
Senate Education Talks Anonymous Reporting Hotline 'Ok-2-Say'

{ HYPERLINK "http://www.gongwer.com/index.cfm?link=bio.cfm&nameid=77201&locid=1" }, the Department of State Police and legislators are in agreement that an anonymous hotline for students and members of the community to report potential for dangerous or violent situations is a good thing, but how exactly that hotline will be organized is still anyone's guess.

The Senate Education Committee on Wednesday took testimony on { HYPERLINK "http://www.gongwer.com/index.cfm?link=legislation_billdetail.cfm&billid=2013SB37401" }, which would create the Michigan Student Safety Act to require the development and implementation of a program that would allow for confidential reports of dangerous, violent or criminal activities to a toll-free hotline.

The Department of Attorney General would develop the program, which Mr. Schuette said in testimony would use $3.5 million fund it has been able to amass from various settlements the state has received.

"What Ok-2-Say is, is really it's an early warning system," Mr. Schuette said. "We try to stop violence in schools before it occurs. Ok-2-Say would be a 24-7 command center of sorts that would receive concerns and threats and then transmit those to the closest responder.



"http://www.gongwer.com/index.cfm?link=bio.cfm&nameid=77201&locid=1" } said on Wednesday that he would like to move legislation on Ok-2-Say before the summer is up.

"The new feature on this which I think is the most fundamental one is the fact that it's confidential," he said. "You eliminate the risk or the fear or concern that this tip would then later be public. It really starts a new dialogue in Michigan."

Mr. Schuette and others continued to refer to a statistic that in the event of serious incidents, whether it was to harm oneself or others, 81 percent of the time there was at least one person other than the perpetrator who knew about it.

"This whole nonsense about don't be a snitch, don't be a nark, we have to stop," Mr. Schuette said. "If we can save the life of even one child, then Ok-2-Say would be of huge value."

But several of the senators on the panel, including { HYPERLINK "http://www.gongwer.com/index.cfm?link=bio.cfm&nameid=93801&locid=1" } (R-St. Clair), chair of the committee, questioned why current hotlines that exist for such purposes were being under-used and how this one would be any different.

Dwayne Gill, legislative liaison for the State Police, responded, "I would imagine that the lack of marketing this hotline that we have could be the reason as to why we have limited calls of service right now."

{ HYPERLINK "http://www.gongwer.com/index.cfm?link=bio.cfm&nameid=251401&locid=1" } (R-Canton Township) said he had hoped the legislation would somehow differentiate this upcoming hotline from others. He also said he wanted to identify how many people would need to staff the hotline, where they would be located and how much money that would cost; as none of that was set in the S-2 substitute of the bill (the committee did not adopt the substitute yet).

The other point of difference both Mr. Gill and Mr. Schuette are hoping to attain with Ok-2-Say is the type of communication available, especially for students. Current hotlines are promoted on the State Police website, Facebook and Twitter, but they do not have much of a presence in schools or on things such as mobile apps, Mr. Gill said.

"We're going to be able to communicate with these children on a level they're used to communicating on," Mr. Gill said, reiterating Mr. Schuette's plans for text message availability, mobile phone apps, and other ways to more effectively reach youth.

The $3.5 million is likely to be used to get the program up and running, Mr. Schuette said, but as long as the legislation keeps moving, he is convinced that his office and others he will be coordinating with will be able to develop the finer details of the program over the summer and before the next school year.

Mr. Pavlov, in speaking to Gongwer News Service after the meeting, said he was unsure whether the funding for the program through the settlements would need to be identified in the current-year budget or identified at all. Technically, the substitute removed language regarding a supplemental and the appropriations process, he said.

He also expects marketing the current hotline will be part of the final product.

"We've got to get the word out. I don't know how they're going to go about it," he said. "We didn't really talk a lot about the implementation of the plan, but clearly we have to be able to make people aware of it."

Mr. Pavlov said it's possible the committee could move the bill before summer recess but wanted to get more details about the development and organization of the program into the bill first.

EAA NOT BEFORE SUMMER RECESS: Mr. Pavlov said on Wednesday he does not expect to take up legislation on expanding the Educational Achievement Authority ({ HYPERLINK "http://www.gongwer.com/index.cfm?link=legislation_billdetail.cfm&billid=2013HB436901" }) before the summer recess, anticipated to be on or around June 21.

There are reportedly significant disagreements between the House and Senate on the language of the bill, but Mr. Pavlov said only, "We just have some work to do on that EAA and it's going to require a little more time to get it right I think."

Asked what kind of work, Mr. Pavlov said, "We've got to work on getting votes." Asked if that was in the committee or in caucus, he said it was "in the Senate." Democrats have largely advocated against the legislation, and recently Senate { HYPERLINK "http://www.gongwer.com/index.cfm?link=bio.cfm&nameid=55701&locid=1" } (R-Monroe) said his caucus isn't too thrilled about it either (See { HYPERLINK "http://www.gongwer.com/index.cfm?link=news.cfm&article_id=521090104" }).

Senate Democrats Announce Winners Of #mi2020 Scholarship

Senate Democrats have announced three winners of their second annual #mi2020 scholarship, originally developed in conjunction with the caucus' plan to approve legislation that would give every Michigan high school senior free college tuition by using money from expiring tax credits.

Though the legislation once received a hearing last term and then died upon the end of session and has yet to be recognized this term, the caucus has kept its scholarship program, which asks current Michigan high school seniors to submit a short video explaining the importance of investing in higher education and how the Michigan 2020 plan is the right investment for the state.

Spencer Genrich of Wyandotte took first place in this year's competition, winning a $10,000 scholarship. Second place went to Sara-Jane Dakroub of Rochester Hills, who received $2,500, and third place went to Nathan Douglas of Bloomingdale, who will receive $1,000.

"I congratulate Spencer, Sara-Jane and Nathan on their winning entries and am excited that we can help them pursue a college education," Senate { HYPERLINK "http://www.gongwer.com/index.cfm?link=bio.cfm&nameid=60101&locid=1" } (D-East Lansing) said in a statement. "This video competition gave students across the state the opportunity to demonstrate their creativity and show us why investing in their futures is investing in our own. Their entries made it clear that the challenges of paying for college are not unique geographically, politically or even economically and show the importance of passing the Michigan 2020 Plan to help all of our kids go to college for free."

The winners were determined by a combination of public vote that included more than 60,000 votes and the votes of a panel of judges that included an educator, a public relations practitioner and a recent college graduate, according to Senate Democrats.

The winning videos can be seen at the Michigan 2020 { HYPERLINK "http://www.michigan2020.com/competition" \t "blank" }.

Bridge Card Fraud Bill Signed By The Governor

{ HYPERLINK "http://www.gongwer.com/index.cfm?link=bio.cfm&nameid=245801&locid=1" } signed a bill Wednesday intended to reduce fraud involving Michigan's Food Assistance program.

"This is a common-sense bill that will continue efforts to save taxpayer dollars by helping keep the Bridge Cards that are intended to help people in need from reaching the hands of criminals," Mr. Snyder said in a statement.

{ HYPERLINK "http://www.gongwer.com/index.cfm?link=legislation_billdetail.cfm&billid=2013HB404201" } (PA 41, immediate effect) makes it mandatory for the Department of Human Services to conduct monthly death record and incarceration checks to ensure Bridge card holders who are deceased or in prison are not still receiving funds.

Department officials have said they were already conducting the checks.

National Guard Director Bill Reported By House Committee

A Senate bill amending the job of an adjutant general, director of the Department of Military and Veterans Affairs, was unanimously reported in a House committee Wednesday.

The House Military and Veterans Affairs Committee reported { HYPERLINK "http://www.gongwer.com/index.cfm?link=legislation_billdetail.cfm&billid=2013SB17501" }, which deals with the job description and retirement changes to the position of adjutant general and assistant adjutant general, as well as expanding some of the governor's authority to enter into agreements with other governors and ordering members of the militia into active service.

The committee also unanimously reported { HYPERLINK "http://www.gongwer.com/index.cfm?link=legislation_billdetail.cfm&billid=2013HB460501" }, { HYPERLINK "http://www.gongwer.com/index.cfm?link=legislation_billdetail.cfm&billid=2013HB473101" }, { HYPERLINK "http://www.gongwer.com/index.cfm?link=legislation_billdetail.cfm&billid=2013HB475201" }

, { HYPERLINK "http://www.gongwer.com/index.cfm?link=legislation_billdetail.cfm&billid=2013HB475401" } and { HYPERLINK "http://www.gongwer.com/index.cfm?link=legislation_billdetail.cfm&billid=2013HB475601" }, with some technical changes to the legislation.

LARA Streamlines 2014 Accountancy License Renewals

The Department of Licensing and Regulatory Affairs on Wednesday said it has streamlined the reporting of continuing professional education and peer review for accountants, and their license renewal must be completed by July 31, 2013.

The license renewal fee paid by July 31, 2013, will be for the license taking effect January 1, 2014, the department said.

The two-year license period had not changed, though, and licenses will still expire December 31 of odd years. Once renewed, the new license registration will expire on December 31, 2015. Registrations are valid until expiration.

The renewal fees for a registered CPA are $50, or $200 for licensed CPAs and licensed firms, respectively.

License and registration renewals not received by the expiration date can be renewed with submission of the regular renewal fee plus an additional $20 late fee within 60 days following the license expiration date, the department said. Licensees who fail to renew online or by mail, or to meet all renewal requirements by the expiration date of the license, cannot legally practice as a certified public accountant or CPA firm and may be subject to disciplinary action if they continue to practice.

STATE CHRISTMAS TREE: The search for the Christmas tree that will stand in front of the Capitol began Wednesday. The Department of Technology, Management and Budget is now taking nominations for a 65-foot tree.

"I know it seems odd to start the search for a Christmas tree at the start of summer," said Phil Jeffery, DTMB chief deputy director, in a press release. "In order to have time to conduct the search and be ready for the lighting festivities in November, this is when we need to start the process."

There are certain requirements that need to be met for the tree, including the height minimum of 65 feet, the maximum trunk diameter of 30 inches, it must be a spruce or a fir tree and it must be given to the state at no cost.

Nominations for the tree will be taken until July 31.

PRE-PAID SALES TAX FOR JULY: Pre-paid gasoline and diesel fuel sales taxes will go up again for wholesalers in July, the Department of Treasury announced in a revenue administrative bulletin, 2013-8.

In July the prepaid sales tax will be 20.8 cents per gallon of gasoline, compared to the 20.5 cents rate set for June, and diesel fuel will go to 22.2 cents per gallon compared to 21.9 cents charged in June.

Appointments By The Governor

MDHHS releases latest round of Flint blood lead level data

LANSING, Mich. – The Michigan Department of Health and Human Services today issued its newest summary report on lead testing in Flint. According to preliminary data, 39 of 1,836 adults and children tested had elevated blood lead levels since Oct. 1.

"As testing continues, our focus remains on helping families reduce all potential exposures to lead," said Dr. Eden Wells, MDHHS chief medical executive. "We are working closely with the Genesee County Health Department to provide information and offer tools in the community, and encourage families to explore the resources that are available to them."

Both capillary and venous blood tests are included in the report, and people who have had multiple tests are counted only once. Tests and their results cover the time since the state action plan was put in place on Oct. 2, and capture the number of elevated blood lead levels greater than 5 micrograms per deciliter.

MDHHS is working closely with local partners to offer resources and distribute important lead testing and prevention information. Additional state funding has allowed for Genesee County Health Department (GCHD) nurses to work with families when an elevated blood lead level is detected. These families can also choose to have the nurse coordinate an environmental health investigation in their home to identify lead exposures, which could be lead from paint, soil, plumbing, and other sources.

To support these efforts, the state is coordinating with its Medicaid health plans and provider communities on enhanced screening and testing. In addition to mandated testing at ages one and two for the Medicaid population, MDHHS has recommended blood lead testing for any child younger than six years of age in Flint who has not previously been tested. The state, in coordination with GCHD, developed and issued a Health Alert Network (HAN) notification for local providers to help ensure consistent messaging and protocols among primary care providers.

Free water filters and replacement cartridges are still available to Flint residents. For a full list of locations and hours of distribution, or to view the full blood lead level report, visit www.michigan.gov/flintwater. The summary will be updated as more data becomes available.

To help residents properly install water filters, and to demonstrate how to replace the original when it expires, MDHHS has created an instructional video on its YouTube channel. For this and other updates, visit www.michigan.gov/flintwater.

Volume #50, Report #231 -- Monday, November 28, 2011

Legislative Leftovers Fill Session Plate

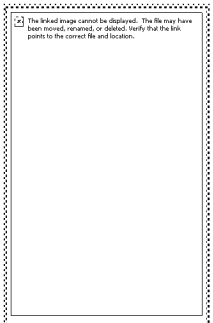
If lawmakers have had their fill of turkey, mashed potatoes and stuffing, they're in for a whole other type of leftover meal when they return for the final three weeks of session on Tuesday.

Major issues are on the table during the last nine session days of 2011 and expect some last minute items to pop up on the agenda of the House and Senate as well.

"People should be prepared for a busy three weeks," said House Republican spokesperson Ari Adler.

Mr. Adler said regulatory and government reform measures are at the top of their list, along with some election reform bills, but "literally anything out there right now is fair game before the end of the year."

In keeping with the fast-paced year, the Republican majorities in the Legislature have lined up more than half-dozen front burner issues and Gongwer News Service breaks down which bills will get done before the first day of winter and which ones are on hold.



Republican lawmakers seem eager to tackle workers' compensation and unemployment benefit reform, but are turning away from major portions of Governor Rick Snyder's agenda for health and transportation infrastructure.

WORKERS' COMPENSATION: Sen. Mark Jansen (R-Gaines Township), who is now steering the chamber through HB 5002, says he wants to work out some issues with stakeholders, but this bill will likely be finished in December.

Mr. Jansen held an extensive hearing over the Thanksgiving break in preparation for a committee vote and Republican leaders have said tackling workers' compensation reform is a high priority.

Police and fire unions have been pressuring lawmakers to exclude them from the major changes being sought - including setting new wage guidelines and requiring injured workers to visit their employer's doctor for 35 more days than current law. But proponents say the changes will codify a Supreme Court ruling that will provide stability to the system for employers and employees alike.

NO-FAULT: Possibly the biggest and most contentious issue on the list is reforming the auto no-fault legislation. Weeks of testimony this fall resulted in the bill (HB 4936) just barely making it out of committee, and it has remained on the floor.

Mr. Adler said the House would like to get it done this year, but it remains to be seen if Republicans can find the votes to pass it.

Even if the House musters the votes, the Senate does not anticipate taking the legislation up this year, said Senate Republican spokesperson Amber McCann.

STATE EMPLOYEE RETIREE BENEFITS: While a subcommittee got to work on these bills over the break (thanks again to Mr. Jansen), the full Senate Appropriations Committee hasn't touched HB 4701 and HB 4702. And Sen. Roger Kahn (R-Saginaw Township) has said he wants a thorough review of the changes to state employee health care benefits, as well as a 4 percent contribution to the pension system.

But the Snyder administration wants these changes badly and the timetable of getting them done in three weeks may just provide enough time to do that vetting.

UNEMPLOYMENT BONDS: The Senate Finance Committee has scheduled a meeting for an unemployment benefit reform bill (SB 806) for Wednesday that is a companion to measures allowing the state to issue $3.1 billion in bonds to pay off its federal unemployment loan debt. The Senate is likely to wrap up these bills (SB 483 and SB 484) so the House can start its assessment.

The House may work some of its unemployment insurance reform bills into the package, but is optimistic overall the issue can be resolved in December.

CHARTER SCHOOLS: SB 618, the charter school reform bill that passed a divided Senate in October, will continue the hearing process in the House this week, with two meetings scheduled.

But this time, there will be a new chairman, following the successful recall of former Rep. Paul Scott (R-Grand Blanc), chair of the House Education Committee.

Rep. Tom McMillin now has the gavel on an interim basis. Mr. Bolger assigned him to that post because he is committed to moving that bill and others through the process that Mr. Scott had started. In 2009, Mr. McMillin introduced a bill to lift the cap on charter schools in the state.

ANTI-BULLYING: Seems like it will be rather straightforward for the Senate to sign off on HB 4163 after its anti-bullying bill (SB 137) imploded prior to the break.

The House bill requires all school districts to have an anti-bullying policy, but does not require that policy to enumerate characteristics that could be the impetus for bullying. It also does not provide a "license to bully" as Democrats charged by allowing statements based on religious or moral convictions to exempt a person from discipline.

The House bill will likely skip the committee process and just move forward in a floor vote.

ROAD COMMISSIONS: The first piece of legislation to arise out of Governor Rick Snyder's special message on infrastructure could see final passage in the House before the end of the year. The bills were reported out of the House Transportation Committee shortly before the two-week hunting break. They would allow county boards of commissioners to take over the powers, duties and functions of their road commissions.

HB 5125 and HB 5126, introduced by Rep. Jon Switalski (D-Warren) and Rep. Dale Zorn (R-Ida), respectively, have bipartisan support as House Speaker Jase Bolger (R-Marshall) and House Minority Leader Richard Hammel (D-Mount Morris Township) both came out in support early on.

HEALTH EXCHANGE: While the Senate passed SB 693 creating the MIHealth Marketplace, which would act as a clearinghouse for insurance plans, the House is not as anxious as the governor to get that into law, as Gongwer has previously reported.

This is the one issue that the House is definitely planning to wait to act on until next year, Mr. Adler said. The House Health Policy Committee has taken weeks of testimony on the issue and another hearing is scheduled for Thursday. But they are not debating the Senate bill, rather continuing discussion on the issue.

The House may wait until after the U.S. Supreme Court rules in June on the constitutionality of the federal Patient Protection and Affordable Care Act.

On the Senate side, Sen. Jim Marleau (R-Lake Orion), Health Policy Committee chair said Monday they will take up legislation this week to make sure health insurance policies sold in the state do not include abortion coverage, including those offered through the exchange.

FILM INCENTIVE: Mr. Adler said Mr. Bolger has had discussions with Senate Majority Leader Randy Richardville (R-Monroe), the bill sponsor, and Mr. Bolger is interested in the bill, seeing it as an improvement over the previous law.

SB 569 will have another hearing in the House Commerce Committee on Thursday. The bill would make sure that that if the state puts money into a film project, it has to be directed in a more responsible way that will benefit workers in the state.

M.E.D.C. INCENTIVES: After sailing through the Senate, the House has taken its time and made changes to a package of bills outlining the proposed structure of a $100 million business development fund for the Michigan Economic Development Corporation.

Mr. Adler said the bills could get done by the end of the year. However, the MEDC is pushing to fix or remove several changes made to the package in the House Commerce Committee before the bills are approved on the floor, as they would most likely be met with rejection in the Senate as written now.

SUPPLEMENTALS: Two supplemental bills are back before the House after seeing approval and changes in the Senate. They should be approved before the end of the year.

HB 4445 would spend $12.5 million from the School Aid Fund to study kindergarten readiness and the quality of nearly 14,000 preschools across Michigan. It should also set up the state for $70 million in federal grants for early childhood education. HB 5014 appropriates $366 million gross ($180 million general fund) over several state departments, the Executive Office and the Legislature.

HELMET REPEAL: Motorcycle riders will have to wait a bit longer before they can cruise without a helmet.

While SB 291 won House approval before break, the Senate is unlikely to concur in the changes in December, leaving this issue for 2012.

As it stands, the bill allows those riders 21 and up to ride without a helmet, but requires them to carry an additional $20,000 in medical insurance if they do.

Ms. McCann said the number of high-priority issues is pushing the helmet law repeal back on the calendar.

BAD DRIVERS FEES: Some of the smaller fees motorists with a poor driving record have to pay will likely remain in place through the end of the year.

SB 166, which eliminates some of those fees, is not one of the major items the Senate has decided to finish this year. The measure won unanimous passage in the House earlier this month.

U.A.W. Local 6000 Ratifies State Contract

Members of the largest state employee union, United Auto Workers Local 6000, have overwhelmingly ratified the new contract with the state beginning with the 2012-13 fiscal year.

Ballots from the UAW local were collected over a three-week period and counted Monday. While a UAW official did not have an exact count of how many of the some 17,000 members voted, and what the vote was, the final result "overwhelmingly" in favor of the contract.

According to a spokesperson for the Office of the State Employer, all of the affected unions covered the by the contract are expected to complete voting and counted on the document by Monday, December 5. The Civil Service Commission is now expected to act on the contract and approve it from the state end on Wednesday, December 7.

State officials had hoped the agreement that was negotiated and announced in late October would be approved with no problem.

The contract calls for a 1 percent pay raise for state workers in October 2012. Workers will also get lump-sum payments in 2012 and 2013 that equal 1 percent increases, though the lump-sum payments will not be part of the workers' base pay.

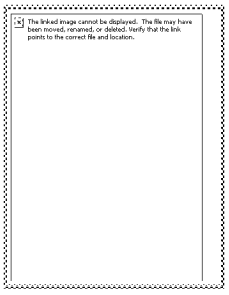
However, the workers will have to begin paying at least 20 percent of the cost of their health insurance coverage beginning in 2012.

Detroit Council Finalizing Proposed Budget Fixes

The Detroit City Council began coalescing Monday behind a plan to resolve the city's short-term cash crisis largely through 2,300 layoffs as the possibility of state intervention continues to loom.

Council members are expected to vote formally Tuesday on the plan, which would save $68 million, said Irvin Corley Jr., the council's fiscal analyst.

But the council lacks the power under the city charter to issue layoffs. Only the mayor, Dave Bing, can do so, and Mr. Bing has stridently resisted the council's proposed 2,300-layoff figure, saying it would cause the city to implode. He has instead proposed 1,000 layoffs.



Detroit Councilmember Gary Brown suggested a consent agreement with the state was inevitable.

Under the council's plan, 1,800 civilian and 500 uniform workers would be laid off, saving $42.6 million. Additionally, the council would cut its $13 million budget, large when compared to cities of similar size around the nation, by 10 percent.

People Mover fares, which just rose from 50 to 75 cents, would rise another 25 cents to $1. And all workers with salaries of more than $100,000 would see a cut in their pay to $100,000. The council also will ask the state to reimburse the city $1 million for the cost of the outside financial report done for Mr. Bing by Ernst and Young.

The Detroit Public Schools also has agreed to pay $15 million in long overdue electric bills to the city.

Council members say adopting these measures will ensure the city makes it through the end of the fiscal year and will not run out of cash in April as would otherwise happen. In the meantime, then Mr. Bing and the council could work on long-term reforms to better align city spending with available revenue.

While the possibility of Governor Rick Snyder naming an emergency manager to run the state's largest city is the most discussed scenario, another possibility is a consent agreement between the city and the state that keeps elected officials in control with enhanced powers. Detroit City Councilmember Gary Brown said that was the likely route, the Detroit Free Press reported.

"A consent agreement gives the city some tools to restructure and keep a democratic structure in place," Mr. Brown said. "We are going to have a consent agreement. The only question is whether we will have a seat at the table to shape the agreement. We need to do whatever possible to make sure we have a representative at the table."

Councilmember Ken Cockrel Jr. also appeared interested in a consent agreement, The Detroit News reported.

"That would actually buy the mayor and the city some time to restructure the city's finances," he said. "And it would give the mayor some leverage it could hold over the unions in terms of negotiating. It's something we have to have some serious discussion on, depending on how this is received by the mayor."

Zeile Links Bullying To School Choice

If the state truly wants to free children from bullying, it should allow greater options for students in where they attend school, State Board of Education member Richard Zeile says.

In an open editorial distributed to a variety of conservatives and news media outlets, Mr. Zeile (R-Detroit) said enabling the bullied to escape their tormentors is a far more effective move than requiring school districts to implement anti-bullying policies.

"Anti-bullying programs rightly address the social world and peer pressure of the school, equipping students to deal with these issues. But the child who is overwhelmed and thinking of killing him/herself because there is no escape needs a more immediate and drastic escape. Such a child (and family) need school choice," Mr. Zeile wrote. "School choice, as a state policy, affords students and families an escape from what may be for them, a toxic social environment to make a new start elsewhere. To be sure, one cannot just flee one's problems: but any school worthy of support will take note of why students leave, and why they enter, especially in mid-year. As such, a school choice policy makes schools as institutions more attentive to the needs and well-being of the students they serve."

Mr. Zeile's comments come as the Senate prepares for what is expected to be final action on HB 4163, which would require school districts to have anti-bullying policies. He dismissed the legislation as merely requiring "more paperwork from overworked administrators."

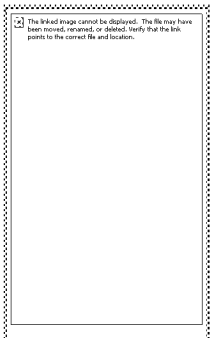
He recalled attending a middle school in suburban Detroit that he called out of control.

"A friend of mine was more than once put upside down in the trash can by rowdy bullies who saw themselves as 'just playing,' he wrote. "I begged my parents at one point to move to where there were safer schools. Fortunately, we belonged to a protestant church that had a tradition of parochial schools which underwrote enough of the tuition so that I could attend a parochial school in Detroit. I made a new start in a school where we students were more afraid of the teachers than we were of the would-be bullies. Had I not had this alternative school I may have indeed dropped out of school, if only for my own perceived safety."

Scott's Legislation Lives On, Even After He's Gone

While recalled Rep. Paul Scott (R-Grand Blanc) may be gone, the bills he introduced remain. But what will be done with them, if anything, is uncertain.

At least one bill, HB 4920, which was approved unanimously in the House in October, is on the agenda for Tuesday's Senate Judiciary Committee. The bill was part of a package that would allow municipalities to enact ordinances on "super drunk" driving violations.



A bill sponsored by recalled Rep.

Paul Scott will be taken up by the Senate Judiciary Committee Tuesday.

Mr. Scott said Monday he was unaware the Senate was taking up his bill, but found humor at the thought of it.

"The ghost of Paul Scott lives on," he said laughing.

There are others as well that could see action. In April, another one of his bills, HB 4466, was reported out of Mr. Scott's Education Committee and referred to second reading.

No further action was taken on the bill, which specifies penalties for public school employees and unions who engage in or encourage strikes. It also included penalties for employers and school board members that engage in lockouts.

Ari Adler, spokesperson for House Speaker Jase Bolger (R-Marshall), said he has not heard anything specific on what will happen to Mr. Scott's bills, but said it's possible some may continue along the process.

For the most part, the bills Mr. Scott introduced were not pet projects and were issues that were part of the House Republicans education reform agenda, Mr. Adler said.

In total, Mr. Scott sponsored 14 bills this year before voters in his district removed him from office. Of those, three became law, but many never made it to a committee agenda as is often the case.

Mr. Scott said he hopes that someone would take up his bills dealing with the sales tax on the difference when purchasing a new vehicle. HB 4138 and HB 4652 were referred to the Tax Policy Committee earlier this year.

A majority of states already have such a law that would allow someone purchasing a new vehicle - after trading in their old one - to only pay the sales tax on the difference, rather than the full price of the new vehicle.

A similar bill was approved overwhelmingly in the Senate in 2009. The argument against the idea is it could hurt the School Aid Fund. In 2009, it was estimated such a change would decrease School Aid revenue by $106 million and general fund/general purpose revenue by $7.8 million. Mr. Scott said he had been working on a way to address the issue.

But of his bills that remain in the pipeline, of most importance to him are HB 5077 and HB 5078, commonly referred to as "Dominick's Law."

Dominick Calhoun was a 4-year-old boy that was beaten for days, allegedly at the hands of his mother's boyfriend, before he died. The boy and his family lived in Mr. Scott's district and he worked on legislation to enhance penalties for child abusers and for those who do so in front of other children.

The bills would establish minimum prison sentences and increase the maximum sentences for first-and second-degree offenses. Sentences would also be increased for repeat offenders and an additional sentence would be tacked on if the crime took place where another child witnessed it.

The bills received a brief hearing in the House Judiciary Committee several days before the recall election.

Mr. Scott said he while he has not done so yet, he plans to reach out to Democrats in Genesee County to see if they will continue pushing for the bills.

"I hope someone will take up the flag on that," he said. "That's a very important piece of legislation."

SCOTT'S COMMITTEE ASSIGNMENTS: The day after the recall election, Mr. Bolger moved quickly to name Rep. Tom McMillin as interim chair of the House Education Committee.

But naming replacements to the other three committees Mr. Scott served on has been slow going.

Mr. Adler said discussions are continuing on who will fill Mr. Scott's seats in the other three committees on which he served: Health Policy, Judiciary and Redistricting and Elections

Flint Still Awaiting Emergency Manager

It has been 20 days since Governor Rick Snyder declared a financial emergency in Flint, but he has not yet named an emergency manager to take over city operations.

Terry Stanton, spokesperson for the Department of Treasury, said the new emergency manager law enacted this year does not set a timetable for the governor to name a manager once he has proclaimed a financial emergency.

There has been some question as to whether Mr. Snyder has had trouble finding someone for the job.

Eric Scorsone, of the State and Local Government Program at Michigan State University's Greening Michigan Institute, sent an email to 35 people November 13 informing them if any were interested in the Flint emergency manager job that they should send him an updated resume.

Mr. Stanton said Mr. Scorsone had offered to put out feelers to potential candidates since he had organized some of the emergency manager training sessions, and the department was happy to listen to any possibilities.

One administration source said an appointment to the post is very close.

Flanagan Names Head Of Steelcase Foundation To Run Great Start Office

Longtime Steelcase Foundation President Susan Broman has been named director of the Office of Great Start, Superintendent of Public Instruction Mike Flanagan announced Monday.

Governor Rick Snyder created the office earlier this year to consolidate and coordinate a variety of early childhood development and learning programs and funding streams that his administration said were fragmented across state government

Ms. Broman also will have the title of deputy director in the Department of Education and will report directly to Mr. Flanagan.

Ms. Broman has been involved in a variety of early childhood education efforts, including serving as chair of the Early Childhood Investment Corporation Board of Directors.

Schuette Says State Has Reciprocity With Others On Concealed Weapons

Michigan residents with concealed weapons permits will be permitted to carry their weapons in 39 other states without getting separate permits in each, Attorney General Bill Schuette said Monday.

The attorney general's office said it had negotiated agreements with the other states to allow Michigan residents that privilege.

To date, Michigan is the only state to have full reciprocity with the other 39 states that have "shall issue" concealed weapons laws.

Under the agreement, for example, a Michigan snowbird resident with a concealed weapon permit would be able to travel to Florida, through Ohio. Kentucky, Tennessee and Georgia, with their weapon and not get a separate permit in those states because, including Florida.

As other states adopt "shall issue" laws, Mr. Schuette said his office would negotiate with those states to ensure Michigan residents could carry their weapons in those states as well.

The agreement also means that residents of other states with "shall issue" concealed weapons permits will be able to carry their weapons in Michigan.

Volume #50, Report #232 -- Tuesday, November 29, 2011

Committee Shakeup As Charter School Vote Looms

As the House Education committee nears a vote on the charter school expansion bill, a major reshuffling of the committee membership has improved its chances of approval.

Tuesday afternoon, House Speaker Jase Bolger's office announced that Rep. Holly Hughes (R White River Township) had been replaced by Rep. Lisa Posthumus Lyons (R-Alto). Ms. Hughes has been noncommittal on the bill, which would end the charter school cap. Ms. Hughes did not respond to a message seeking comment.

"People can believe whatever they want, but we needed to make a multitude of changes for a multitude of reasons," Mr. Bolger's spokesperson Ari Adler said. "Once you start making changes to committee assignments, you end up with a domino effect."

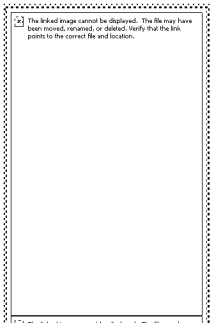
Rep. Jon Bumstead (R-Newaygo) was added to the committee to replace recalled Rep. Paul Scott.

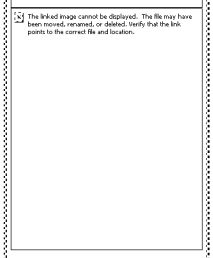
One source, speaking on condition of anonymity, said the move was not a punitive one against Ms. Hughes, but rather designed to protect her politically. Had Ms. Hughes, who represents a politically competitive district that previously was held by a Democrat, voted for the bill, the Michigan Education Association might have heavily targeted her for defeat in 2012. If Ms. Hughes had voted no, she might have lost support from key Republican constituencies and drawn a Republican primary challenge.

Several sources noted that had Mr. Bolger wanted to stack the deck to overwhelmingly report the bill, he could have replaced other members on the committee like Rep. Thomas Hooker (R-Byron Center) and Rep. Ken Yonker (R-Caledonia), who have wavered on charter school expansion, with sure yes votes.

Mr. Adler said many members were willing to work with Mr. Bolger to take on different assignments, either temporarily or permanently as needed, to help with the committee workload. Mr. Bolger announced several committee assignment changes Tuesday to replace the spots Mr. Scott had held, one of which went to Ms. Hughes on Health Policy.

"It's that kind of caucus cohesion that makes the House Republicans such a powerful force for reform," he said.





Word is House Speaker Jase Bolger replaced Rep. Holly Hughes on the Education Committee to protect her from the politically difficult vote.

Gongwer News Service first reported that some House Republicans were having doubts on ending the cap on how many university-authorized charter schools can exist (See Gongwer Michigan Report, October 26, 2011). At the time, the Michigan Association of Public School Academies sent out an alert to its supporters asking them to urge a handful of House Republicans, including Ms. Hughes, to back the bill. Ms. Hughes declined to say where she stood on the issue, but several sources following the issue said she was a solid no.

During three hours of testimony Tuesday, the two sides of the charter school debate made many of their same arguments, but this time in front of Rep. Tom McMillin (R-Rochester Hills), the new interim chair of the House Education Committee, following the recall of Mr. Scott.

Several in the packed crowd bristled at Mr. McMillin's way of questioning those testifying, and he also had words with Rep. Lisa Brown (D-West Bloomfield Township) who didn't appreciate his answering the question she was asking a charter school advocate.

Following testimony from staff members at the Holly Academy, Ms. Brown asked if they still supported the bill, knowing that SB 618 caps the number of Schools of Excellence, of which Holly Academy is one.

Mr. McMillin interjected and said there will still be excellent schools, because competition and choice will make sure of that, and those that not doing well won't succeed.

"Mr. Chairman, I'm asking them the question if you don't mind," Ms. Brown said.

Mr. McMillin shot back, saying he was the chair, and asked her if this is how she was going to ask questions.

At the start of the hearing, the panel heard from Fern Katz, vice president of the Southfield Public Schools Board of Education. She opposed the bill for several reasons, including, she said, because it hurts public schools when students leave charters following the Friday count day that determines their annual funding. When those students come in, the school is not given the necessary funding from the state, she said.

Later, Melanie Laber, principal at FlexTech.High school in Brighton, testified about the success of their new charter school. She said they face the same funding issues as public schools when new students arrive later in the year.

Mr. McMillin said if students arrived later this school year, she would receive 10 percent of the foundation allowance for those students. She said they were fine with that.

"And you're not whining about the idea that you're only going to get 10 percent, I mean it's the kids we're focused on, right?" McMillin said, drawing several jeers from the audience.

Under the bill, the 150-school threshold would be eliminated, it would allow two or more authorizers to issue a charter school contract and it requires demonstrated academic achievement in educational goals for all student grade levels.

It also removes a requirement that labor agreements of a resident school district carry into the new charter school and requires 5 percent, instead of 15 percent, of school district electors to initiate a ballot petition to issue a new charter school.

The bill passed a divided Senate in October.

Two of Ms. Laber's students testified about how much they enjoyed their charter school experience. One was freshman Amelia Moorehouse, who is a competitive gymnast and spends most of her day practicing and attending meets around the Midwest. She attends the school two days a week, and communicates with her teachers daily, and takes online classes.

"We do high school differently," Ms. Laber said.

She said when they opened this year they began with about 25 students and now have about 160, with more coming every week.

Ms. Brown said it was great the school opened this year. It was one of 19 charter schools that to open this year.

"So there's a not a problem, because you opened a charter school," she said.

Ms. Laber said they have about 25 students to interview before the end of the year who would like to attend, prompting Ms. Brown to ask if they turn students away.

"If we don't think they are going to be successful, we talk to them about other options," Ms. Laber said.

Rep. Deb Shaughnessy (R-Charlotte) said if charters are rejecting students because they are full, then lifting the cap would eliminate that problem, she said.

Eugene Cain, chief school administrator at the El-Hajj Malik El-Shabazz Public School Academy in Lansing talked about the success they have had. He noted they take all students, have their own buses and have a special education program.

He said he supports the bill because he believes in choice.

"People of means have always had choice, I would rather see that extended," he said.

Rep. Rudy Hobbs (D-Lathrup Village) asked how this bill to allow more charter schools would do anything to replicate the success Mr. Cain has had at his school.

Mr. Cain said he hadn't read the entirety of the bill and Mr. Hobbs urged him to do so.

A group of parents from the Grand Rapids area spoke in opposition to the bill, saying they feared it would take away the students with the means, and would leave the most vulnerable in the public schools.

They said they were not opposed to choice, but that this bill would allow for any charters to open, not just good charter schools.

The Michigan Municipal League and the Michigan Townships Association also testified in opposition to a portion of the bill that allows for a property tax exemption to for-profit entities that lease their buildings to charter schools. The precedent that would set, as well as the financial loss due to this subsidy, concerned them, officials from the MML and MTA said.

The Department of Education indicated that if the bill became law and there was no limit on the number of charter schools, that the department would need additional staff member to handle all the new applications.

Several opponents of the bill pointed out that several charter schools have been shut down due to poor performance.

Mr. McMillin said there are quality issues with traditional public schools as well and none have ever been shut down.

"We are going to make sure that is dealt with," he said.

He said he plans to form a subcommittee to look into quality issues of both types of schools.

"I think it would be unfair just to address charters," Mr. McMillin said.

Another hearing on the bill is set for Wednesday morning when a vote is expected.

FOR-PROFIT CHARTERS: As the House committee mulled that measure, Senate Democrats said Tuesday they are introducing a constitutional amendment banning for-profit companies from operating charter schools.

Four out of five Michigan charter schools are run as for-profit, and Sen. Rebekah Warren (D-Ann Arbor), the lead sponsor of the amendment, said they could simply change their business model to continue operating in the state.

"A quality education is a service, not a commodity," said Sen. Hoon-Yung Hopgood (D-Taylor), lead Democrat on the Senate Education Committee.

Ms. Warren said it's troubling the Legislature would expand charter schools when most of those in existence perform at the same level or worse than traditional public schools and the state already has the largest student population participating in charters in the nation. The focus of charter schools should be on providing amazing results for students, not on strengthening the corporate bottom line.

"With the tightening School Aid Fund budget we need to make sure we are as effective and efficient with the public dollar," she said.

Democrats said they were hopeful the Republican-led Legislature will take up the constitutional amendment, but also want to raise awareness about the issue. They shied away from saying a citizen-led petition drive would be the only way for the measure to be put before voters.

Senate Majority Leader Randy Richardville (R-Monroe) said, "For-profit charter schools are offering another choice for people to educate their children."

He said he doesn't have a problem with charter schools that make a profit if they provide a superior product and he questioned Ms. Warren's suggestion that most charter schools perform at or worse than traditional public schools. Regardless, he said the marketplace should decide which charter schools operate.

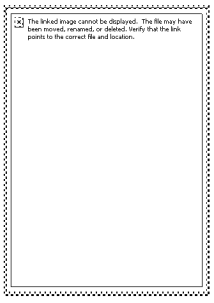
Anti-Bullying Bill Completed With Senate Vote

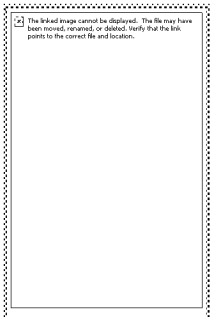
All Michigan school districts will be required to have an anti-bullying policy on the books in six months under legislation sent to Governor Rick Snyder for his signature Tuesday.

The Senate vote on HB 4163 - which skipped a committee hearing and went straight to final passage - ended a troubled chapter for majority Republicans on the issue.

The drama began earlier this month when the Senate passed SB 137, which included exemptions from the anti-bullying policy for statements made based on religious or moral convictions.

Senate Republicans defended the language by saying it protected free speech, but Democrats successfully got the issue on the national stage and ridiculed the bill as a "license to bully."





Sen. Rick Jones (top) got the ball rolling on the mandate that all schools institute anti-bullying policies, but Rep. Phil Potvin's bill is the one headed to the governor's desk.

Republicans in the House declared the bill "toxic" and that chamber quickly moved its anti-bullying bill comprised in HB 4163. The issue lingered over the two-week legislative recess and when the Senate gaveled into session Tuesday, it was the first bill to come up for a vote.

"I know there is a rush to recover from that and move on," said Sen. Glenn Anderson (D-Westland). "(But) passing this bill is taking the easy way out."

Mr. Anderson, who became one of two "no" votes, said the bill was incomplete without his amendments requiring schools to report on instances of bullying and enumerating the personal characteristics of a person that would have to be considered in schools' anti-bullying policies.

Majority Republicans rejected those amendments, along with one including more protections from cyber-bullying.

Sen. Rick Jones (R-Grand Ledge), who sponsored the Senate's anti-bullying bill, spoke briefly on the floor to oppose the cyber-bullying amendment, saying it could render the legislation unconstitutional.

In a statement, Mr. Jones said, "As a parent and as a friend of a family that lost a child, I feel very strongly that every school should have a bullying policy. In the end we accomplished our goal, and I am happy to see years of hard work pay off."

Sen. John Gleason (D-Flushing), who camped out in the Capitol after the Senate's initial anti-bullying vote, said, "This bill as passed today finally honors the memory of Matt Epling and the other Michigan students who took their lives due to bullying and harassment, and hopefully ensures that Michigan students will no longer find themselves in such dire situations. Implementing a statewide anti-bullying policy in Michigan finally puts us on par with the rest of the country and hopefully diffuses the national embarrassment and outrage Senate Republicans evoked with their previous 'anti-bullying legislation' that actually did more harm than good."

But Senate Majority Leader Randy Richardville (R-Monroe) said the Senate's first anti-bullying bill protected free speech and was "politicized and twisted around."

Mr. Richardville told reporters that was one step in the process and voting on the House bill finalizes that process.

"This is a very good (anti) bullying bill," he said.

Superintendent of Public Instruction Mike Flanagan, who had mocked the Senate's anti-bullying bill as a "joke," released a statement saying, "This has been an emotional issue and I appreciate the Senate showing the leadership to reconsider its position today and completing this cooperative process with respect to every side of this debate for the protection of all schoolchildren."

But Emily Dievendorf, director of policy for Equality Michigan, said the legislation is still "weak" without enumeration.

"Both Oregon and Washington passed weak bills like this one and had to go back and revise them years later when data showed the initial bills had failed. This kind of delay is not an acceptable response to Michigan's bullying crisis," she said.

The final vote was 35-2, with Sen. Mike Green (R-Mayville) joining Mr. Anderson in dissent. Sen. Bert Johnson (D-Highland Park) was absent for the vote.

RENAISSANCE ZONES: Redeveloped facilities located in a renaissance zone, such as condos, would continue to be eligible for a state income tax credit under SB 748 and SB 790, which the Senate passed on 36-2 votes apiece.

Proponents say residents living in these domiciles should continue to receive the tax credit they expected to get.

Earlier this year, the Legislature and governor eliminated many personal income tax credits. Sen. Bruce Caswell (R-Hillsdale) and Senate Majority Floor Leader Arlan Meekhof (R-West Olive) provided the opposing votes.

Damrow Steps Down As Veterans Committee Chair

Rep. Kurt Damrow (R-Austin) resigned Tuesday as chair of the Military and Veterans Affairs and Homeland Security Committee. According to Ari Adler, spokesperson for House Speaker Jase Bolger (R-Marshall), Mr. Damrow said he wanted to focus more on projects he is working on within his district.

Mr. Damrow did not return messages seeking comment.

For months, he has been traveling around the state talking to veterans groups about issues in his committee and urging veterans to take advantage of benefits available to them.

It was at one of these veterans forums where Mr. Damrow ended up having to later refute allegations that he falsely claimed he served in the Iraq war. He never served in the war, because he sustained injuries when his car hit a cow.

He claims the newspaper in Coldwater covering the event got it wrong; the newspaper stands by its story.

The freshman lawmaker has been under fire recently in his district for that and other issues and is facing a potential primary fight next August.

Rep. Kenneth Kurtz (R-Coldwater) will replace Mr. Damrow as chair. Rep. Holly Hughes (R-White River Township) will replace Mr. Damrow on the committee. Rep. Dale Zorn (R-Ida), will be the majority vice chair.

Snyder Names Former Acting Mayor As Flint's Emergency Manager

Michael Brown, who was Flint's acting mayor in 2009, will oversee its financial recovery as the city's emergency manager. Mr. Brown was named the emergency manager Tuesday by Governor Rick Snyder, the second such emergency manager for Flint in less than a decade.

Mr. Brown was named after the city did not use any of its legal options, under PA 4, to appeal the finding Mr. Snyder made on November 8 that the city was in a financial emergency.

In a statement, Mr. Snyder said Mr. Brown has "a strong track record of serving the Flint-area community."

The appointment also comes as attention on the issue of an emergency financial manager is now focused on whether a manager will eventually be named for Detroit. Mr. Snyder and Treasurer Andy Dillon are trying to convince city officials to request a review of their finances. Such a review would be the first step toward appointing an emergency manager, depending on what it found. But city officials are so far resisting that effort, though Mayor Dave Bing has warned the city could run out of cash by April if drastic steps are not taken to bring the city's finances under control.

Along with Flint, emergency managers also oversee Detroit Public Schools, Benton Harbor, Pontiac and Ecorse. A financial review is also now underway for Benton Harbor and Highland Park schools.

Mr. Brown is now president of the East Lansing-based Prima Civitas Foundation, and also director of the Flint Area Reinvestment Office.

Mr. Brown was born and raised in Flint, and earned degrees from both Western Michigan University and the University of Stockholm. He served as acting mayor of the city for six months after Mayor Don Williamson resigned ahead of a recall election.

In his statement, Mr. Snyder said Mr. Brown would work collaboratively with Flint elected officials to address the financial emergency and "return the city to local control, as quickly and efficiently as possible."

Saying resolving the emergency was a personal matter for him, Mr. Brown also said he was optimistic city officials would work cooperatively to resolve the situation.

Mr. Snyder announced the emergency on Election Day, and Mayor Dayne Walling was re-elected that day. Since his re-election, Mr. Walling has also taken some major steps to resolve the city's financial situation, replacing several top officials.

Even as Mr. Brown was named, opponents of PA 4 are continuing efforts to collect petition signatures to hold a referendum on the measure.

A few weeks ago, officials for the effort said they had gathered about half the signatures needed.

House Republicans Have Heating Assistance Fund Solution

House Republicans say they have found a way to avert a potential major crisis this winter for low-income residents facing utility shutoff notices.

Rep. Ken Horn (R-Frankenmuth) chair of the House Energy and Technology Committee, said two bills will be introduced Wednesday that should ensure people have access to those emergency funds.

The Low-Income and Energy Efficiency Fund was put in doubt following a surprising Court of Appeals ruling this summer that found that legislation passed in 2009 indicated a desire by the Legislature that the fund continue to exist, but the massive 2008 energy reform law was stripped of any language regarding the fund.

It ruled that utilities can contribute to the fund, but the MPSC no longer has authority to add that contribution to a utility's rates.

The funds are blended at the state level and distributed to help those facing shut off notices. Despite a widely held belief that state law does not allow utilities to shut people off in the winter, that is not the case. About 130,000 residents from every county receive annual assistance from the funding.

Mr. Horn said a bill by Rep. Amanda Price (R-Holland) will be a supplemental appropriations bills to take $62 million in Temporary Assistance for Needy Families funding that had been carried over and transfer into the state's Emergency Relief Fund.

This is a one-time fix to get them through the winter, Mr. Horn said. In January, he said they will begin in earnest to find a long-term funding solution.

"We don't know what that's going to be yet," he said.

Since the ruling, the Public Service Commission has been directing the utilities to continue collecting funds in rates but to escrow them and wait for further instructions from the commission.

Mr. Horn said the second bill is his and it will seek to have utility ratepayers refunded the money that has been collected and put into that escrow account. It totals about $40 million, he said.

"(The commission) should not have asked for that to be collected," he said.

The commission is responsible for ordering refunds, but Mr. Horn said his bill will make sure the commission is clear on the Legislature's intent.

In a statement, House Speaker Jase Bolger (R-Marshall) said, "Our plan is a comprehensive solution to protect low-income residents this winter and provide Michigan ratepayers with some much-needed relief on their utility bills. It's a budgetary and statutory fix that protects families, prioritizes spending and keeps costs down for Michigan's ratepayers."

Court Of Appeals Redistricting Plan Headed To House Floor

A plan to reconfigure the counties in the four districts of the Court of Appeals to make the populations more equal made it through committee with ease Tuesday.

The redistricting plan contained in HB 5160 was approved at the House Redistricting and Elections Committee with all Republicans in support, while all three Democrats chose to abstain.

There was only a brief discussion on where the cases would be tried since so many counties were being shifted around.

"Redistricting is not supposed to be this easy," said Rep. Pete Lund (R-Shelby Township), the bill sponsor and committee chair.

Under the new plan, there is a difference of 5,622 citizens between the highest and lowest populated districts. Without redistricting, the currents districts have a difference of 385,000 people.

To achieve that parity, the bill shifts around a number of counties in the four judicial districts in the state.

The redistricting appears to set up the court to achieve the proposed reduction of one judge in each district as Supreme Court Chief Justice Robert Young Jr. has urged.

The First District already has a vacancy and no judges would be added or dropped from it.

The changes would move Judge E. Thomas Fitzgerald out of the Second District and into the Fourth District, dropping the Second District from seven to six judges.

Judge Douglas Shapiro would be drawn out of the Third District and into the Fourth while Judge Peter O'Connell would move from the Fourth to the Third. That would keep the Third at its current six judges.

The Fourth District would grow from seven to eight judges, but two of those eight are ineligible to seek another term under the ban on those 70 or older from seeking re-election, so when those judges' terms expire, the district could drop to six judges like the other districts.

District one adds Barry and Jackson counties along with Calhoun, Hillsdale, Lenawee, Monroe, and Wayne.

District two drops Shiawassee County, but keeps Genesee, Macomb, and Oakland.

The big swings come in districts three and four. District three will go from 16 counties to 29, while district four will drop from 58 counties to 44.

The proposed district three includes Allegan, Benzie, Berrien, Branch, Cass, Clare, Crawford, Eaton, Gladwin, Ionia, Isabella, Kalamazoo, Kalkaska, Kent, Lake, Manistee, Mason, Mecosta, Missaukee, Montcalm, Muskegon, Newaygo, Oceana, Ogemaw, Osceola, Ottawa, Roscommon, St. Joseph, and Van Buren counties.

There are presently supposed to be seven judges in each district, but Governor Rick Snyder has already declined to fill two vacancies.

The Judicial Resources Recommendations report released in August calls for the elimination of four judges of the Court of Appeals. Under the new plan there would be six judges in each district.

Road Commissions Takeover Bills On Tap For Final Vote

After several attempts by Democrats to make changes on the floor were rejected, the first piece of Governor Rick Snyder's special message on infrastructure is set for final passage. But the bills are not on the agenda for Wednesday's session.

The bills would allow county boards of commissioners to take over the powers, duties and functions of their road commissions.

HB 5125 and HB 5126, introduced by Rep. Jon Switalski (D-Warren) and Rep. Dale Zorn (R-Ida), respectively, have bipartisan support as House Speaker Jase Bolger (R-Marshall) and House Minority Leader Richard Hammel (D-Mount Morris Township) both came out in support early on.

Members of road commissions from around the state came to the Capitol on Tuesday to speak with their lawmakers about the bill.

"A governmental body that was created by a vote of the electorate in each county should not be eliminated by resolution of another elected governmental entity," John Niemela, director of the County Road Association of Michigan, said in a statement. "Road commissions were created by a vote of the people and should only be eliminated, regionalized or consolidated by a vote of the electorate."

He said commissions should not be merged just for the sake of consolidation. In Genesee County, he noted, the road commission has a better bond rating with Standard & Poor's than the county government does, and a recent storm water culvert replacement program would have cost more than $53,000 more annually if the county had to seek the bond.

N.G.A.: States Boost Budgets, But Still Being Squeezed

States increased their fiscal year 2012 general fund budgets an average of 2.9 percent over their fiscal 2011 budgets, though Michigan actually bucked that trend, the National Governors Association said in a report released Tuesday.

But in the report, the NGA said state governments still face significant economic pressure on their upcoming budgets.

Revenues could be off because of a sudden economic slowdown during the summer (most state fiscal years begin on July 1, Michigan's begins on October 1) when officials worried the nation could slip back into recession. States also face pressure because of cutbacks in federal spending to the states (as spending through the 2009 stimulus bill comes to a final end) and from local governments pleading for help to maintain local services.

While the budgets overall increased by 2.9 percent for FY 2012, the NGA said, general fund revenues in total were estimated at $659.4 billion, an increase of 1.6 percent.

Given its population size, Michigan has a somewhat smaller general fund budget than most states, because its school funding is segregated in the School Aid Fund. Most states finance education out of their general fund. For example, Indiana, which is about half Michigan's population, has a general fund budget for FY 2012 of $13.9 billion compared to Michigan's general fund budget of about $8.3 billion.

Michigan's FY 2012 budget is 4.2 percent smaller than its FY 2011 budget of $8.6 billion.

Just six states actually cut their general fund budgets for FY 2012, according to the NGA. The largest percentage increase was in Alaska where the budget was raised by 21.3 percent. North Dakota also saw its budget increased by 20.7 percent.

Nevada, which has had the nation's worst unemployment rate for more than a year, saw the largest cut in its overall budget of 6.9 percent.

The NGA report also showed that Michigan would have some of the largest overall percentage drops in the number of state employees. At the end of FY 2010, the NGA said Michigan had 47,687 workers and by FY 2012 it was at 42,200, an 11.5 percent drop.

Nationwide, the states and Puerto Rico had a total of 3.019 million workers in FY 2012, down 1.1 percent from a total of 3.054 million workers in FY 2010.

M.E.D.C. Incentive Bills Headed For Final Passage Wednesday

A number of changes were made on the floor to a package of bills outlining the proposed structure of a $100 million business development fund for the Michigan Economic Development Corporation and are expected to be approved by the full House Wednesday.

The Michigan Economic Development Corporation had been pushing to fix or remove several changes made to the package in the House Commerce Committee, as they would most likely be met with rejection in the Senate as written then.

SB 556, SB 566, SB 567, SB 568 and SB 644 were moved to Third Reading on Tuesday.

The changes are largely included in substitutes to SB 567and SB 568 that address concerns over transparency and restrictions on which type of projects could receive help from the new community revitalization program, which replaces the state's brownfield tax credit program.

Fee For Telecom Access Along Rail Trails Divides Industry, D.N.R.

How much telecommunication companies should pay to run fiber optics under state-owned rail trails is a point of contention on a bill the Senate Energy and Technology Committee took up Tuesday.

A substitute for SB 499 would require an application fee up to $350 and companies to pay 5 cents per linear foot for lines installed in the rail trail, but an official from the Department of Natural Resources said the fee should represent the property's value, which is different across the state.

If the bill were to reflect that, than the price would be about $6 per linear foot in the Upper Peninsula and $15 in parts of southeastern Michigan, said DNR Legislative Liaison Gary Owen.

As proposed, the department would spend more to collect a fee than what it would be worth since it takes between $500 and $2,000 to maintain every mile of rail trail each year. Mr. Owen said the department supports the bill in concept, particularly because it does create a fund for trail maintenance.

But the president of the Telecommunications Association of Michigan said it's excessive fees that have slowed down installation of broadband across the state and the bill is intended to remedy that, particularly in rural communities.

Scott Stevenson said the department does not need as much money to maintain the trails as officials say they do, and besides, the fee is all new money to the DNR anyway.

The committee did not vote on the bill, which also received support from the Michigan Trails and Greenways Alliance, Michigan Cable Telecommunications Association, Michigan United Conservation Clubs.

The panel did vote on HB 4683, which extends the deadline for owners and operators of multiple-line telephone systems to upgrade their phones so emergency dispatchers can pinpoint where a call is originating. The upgrades were required in the 2007 Emergency 911 Service Enabling Act, but the Public Service Commission didn't begin the official rule-making process until earlier this year and telephone operators say they need more time to implement the changes.

The bill extends the deadline by five years.

Unemployment Drops In All Mich. Labor Markets

All 17 Michigan labor markets experienced jobless rate declines in October, the Department of Technology, Management and Budget said Tuesday.

Jobless Rates Drop From September to October

Ann Arbor: 6.6% to 5.7%

Battle Creek: 8.6% to 7.5%

Bay City: 8.8% to 7.9%

Detroit-Warren-Livonia: 11.7% to 10.8%

Flint: 10.6% to 9.4%

Grand Rapids-Wyoming: 7.9% to 7.1%

Holland-Grand Haven: 7.8% to 7%

Jackson: 9.5% to 8.4%

Kalamazoo-Portage: 8.3% to 7.3%

Lansing-East Lansing: 7.7% to 6.7%

Monroe: 9.2% to 8.1%

Muskegon-Norton Shores: 10% to 9%

Niles-Benton Harbor: 9.5% to 8.4%

Saginaw-Saginaw Township North: 9.1% to 8.1%

Upper Peninsula: 8.8 to 7.9%

Northeast Lower Michigan: 10.7% to 10.1%

Northwest Lower Michigan: 9.9% to 9.1%

The over-the-month drop ranged from 0.6 to 1.2 percentage points, and 15 markets now stand at an unemployment rate below 10 percent.

Total employment was up over the month in 13 markets with the biggest gains reported in Ann Arbor and East Lansing. Northeast and Northwest Lower Michigan reported employment declines, which are in tune with the summer tourism season drawing to a close.

Labor force levels were down in 14 markets, although Ann Arbor, East Lansing and Kalamazoo-Portage reported seasonal gains in that category.

"The underlying trend in 2011 among Michigan's local labor markets has been reduced work force levels," said Rick Waclawek, director of the Bureau of Labor Market Information & Strategic Initiatives. However, employment levels have been more varied, with some regions recording employment gains over the year while others reported reductions."

For the year, jobless rates are down in all 17 markets, with the drop ranging from 1.4 to 2.6 percentage points. The most pronounced drops have occurred in Muskegon-Norton Shores, Flint and Jackson. Labor force levels have also fallen over the year in all state markets.

Eighty of the state's 83 counties saw their unemployment rates decrease over the month. Mackinac County reported the lowest jobless rate for the month at 5 percent, while Baraga County had the highest jobless rate at 15.1 percent.

The state's monthly survey of employers shows unadjusted payroll jobs increased by 29,000 in October, with 13,000 jobs added in professional and business services with another 8,000 added in education and health services.

Leisure and hospitality services were down 11,000 jobs over the month, while government jobs saw a statewide increase in October.

Overall, payroll jobs were up in 12 of 14 major state markets during the month.

House Panel Reports Aquatic Nuisance Package

The House Natural Resources, Tourism and Outdoor Recreation Committee reported legislation Tuesday to create the Aquatic Invasive Species Advisory Council.

The bills (SB 508, SB 509, SB 510, HB 4826, HB 4827, HB 4828) create the commission and charge it with recommending legislation that would help to prevent the introduction and spread of invasive species.

The bills were all reported unanimously and move to the House floor for action.

The committee also discussed SB 248, which caps the amount of property the state can own.

Rep. Frank Foster (R-Pellston), chair of the committee, said there were some amendments being drafted to the bill, but he some did not yet have sponsors and he did not go into detail on what the proposed changes would do.

Sen. Tom Casperson (R-Escanaba), sponsor of the legislation, also did not go into detail on the amendments he had been presented, but said some he would support while others would gut the bill.

Though Mr. Casperson said the bill as passed by the Senate resolved many of the concerns raised by environmental and conservation groups, many of those groups, including the Michigan Environmental Council and the Michigan United Conservation Clubs, continue to oppose the legislation.

Kent Wood with MUCC said the measure would potentially pit communities against each other for state land purchases and ownership, particularly given the extensive state holdings in the Upper Peninsula and the dearth of state lands in the southern portions of the state.

James Clift with MEC said the cap could force the state to sell lands at below market value, depressing values for surrounding owners.

Few Changes Expected To Film Incentive

The House Commerce Committee will begin work on the new film incentive program on Thursday, but at this point is not expecting major changes to the proposal.

Aides to Rep. Wayne Schmidt (R-Traverse City), chair of the committee, said he is satisfied with the plan, which would provide tax incentives starting at between 25 percent and 32 percent for costs of activities and personnel in Michigan.

The committee could report the bill (SB 596) as early as next Tuesday.

Snyder Signs School Election Consolidation

School districts will have to conduct elections for their boards of education in November of even-numbered years under bills signed into law by Governor Rick Snyder.

Supporters say they hope the new laws will ensure greater voter turnout while sparing districts the cost of running an election at other times. Districts often hold their board elections in May or November of odd-numbered years.

"Utilizing a standard election cycle will cut administrative costs and help schools maintain focus on educating students," Mr. Snyder said, estimating the savings over a two-year period at $8 million for districts. "This change also allows for more consolidated elections so voters have the best opportunity to make their voices heard."

Mr. Snyder signed the bills (SB 427, PA 232; HB 4005, PA 233) Monday. They were filed Tuesday.

Snyder Appoints Acting Fire Marshal

Governor Rick Snyder appointed Karen Towne of Haslett as acting fire marshal following the resignation earlier this month of Ronald Farr, who is leaving for a new job.

"He did a great job, and we really thank him for his service," Snyder press secretary Sara Wurfel said.

Ms. Wurfel said a search is underway for a full-time successor and she expected that appointment to come soon.

Committee Roundup

CONCEALED WEAPONS: The chair of the Senate Judiciary Committee held off voting on legislation (SB 59) that would allow people to apply for a concealed weapons permit in any county in Michigan, saying the sponsor needs to work out remaining concerns about the bill with stakeholders.

The bill now includes up to a $20 fee for counties to issue non-resident CCW permits, with the money splitting 50-50 between the county clerks and sheriffs.

But Sen. Tory Rocca (R-Sterling Heights) said he's concerned the new substitute is too limiting when it comes to gun boards being able to bring an applicant in for questioning. He said the process of interviewing a first-time applicant is important to ensure the person answers the same way in person as they did on the form.

Bill Anderson with the Michigan Townships Association also said the substitute is confusing in terms of which law enforcement agency a county would call to obtain more information on an applicant who lives in a township.

The Michigan Association of County Clerks and Michigan Association of Chiefs of Police oppose the bill and Sen. Rick Jones (R-Grand Ledge), the committee chair, urged Sen. Mike Green (R-Mayville) to work with Mr. Rocca, Mr. Anderson and those groups on their concerns.

Mr. Jones said he expected a vote on the bill would come next week.

Capital Notebook: U.A.W. Ratification Was Overwhelming

As was first reported in Gongwer News Service on Monday, members of the union representing the largest number of state employees, United Auto Workers Local 6000, easily approved the new contract that will begin with the 2012-13 fiscal year.

The vote was 3,384 in favor and 405 against.

SNYDER SETS SPECIAL MESSAGE ON TALENT FOR THURSDAY: Governor Rick Snyder will deliver his latest special message, this one on how to recruit and retain talent in the state, at 10 a.m. Thursday at Delta College in University Center.

"This is an area he is incredibly passionate about. He believes the No. 1 resource our state has is talent," Snyder press secretary Sara Wurfel said.

Ms. Wurfel said a focus of the speech would be on how to better match the skills of those seeking jobs with the jobs available.

INSURANCE LICENSE SUSPENDED: Erickson & Associates in Iron Mountain has had their license suspended by the Office of Financial and Insurance Regulation for not remitting payments to the right insurance companies from December 2010 through March. Bruce Erickson had his license revoked by OFIR in 2010, but also had continued to operate his business through the company.

COMMITTEE ASSIGNMENTS: House Speaker Jase Bolger announced the rest of the changes in committee assignments following the recall of Rep. Paul Scott (R-Grand Blanc).

As previously announced, Rep. Tom McMillin was named as interim chair of the House Education Committee.

Rep. Kevin Cotter (R-Mount Pleasant) was added to take Mr. Scott's seat on the Judiciary Committee. Rep. Holly Hughes (R-White River Township) was added to the Health Policy Committee and Rep. Al Pscholka (R-Stevensville) was added to the Redistricting and Elections Committee.

WATER RESOURCES COMPACT: The Office of the Great Lakes is seeking comment on its report on its activities under the Great Lakes - St. Lawrence River Basin Water Resources Compact.

The report includes descriptions of the state's water withdrawal permitting process as well as targets for water conservation.

In addition to comment on the contents of the report itself, the agency is also seeking input on its goals and targets under the compact.

Comments can be submitted to Frank Ruswick at the Department of Environmental Quality.

EMERGENCY PREPAREDNESS: The Department of Community Health has developed an emergency preparedness curriculum for schools in the state. The curriculum was added to the Michigan Model for Health for the current school year.

"The Emergency Preparedness Curriculum is designed to build resiliency within our communities by empowering children with the knowledge and skills to make smart decisions before, during and after an emergency," said DCH Director Olga Dazzo said in a statement. "As our children and families become better prepared, Michigan will be better able to recover from a tornado, big snow storm or disease epidemic."

The curriculum was developed under a federal grant and is designed to meet both the National Health Education Standards and the Michigan Grade Level Content Expectations.

Volume #50, Report #239 -- Thursday, December 8, 2011

Confusion Reigns On Live-In Partner Benefit Ban

Employees at public universities would not be able to offer medical benefits to an unrelated adult living with them, House Republicans said Thursday, contrary to a Wednesday move by the Senate removing a reference to higher education institutions in the bill.

There was confusion on the issue as the House concurred with the Senate changes by a vote of 63-45. The Senate changes were said to bring the bill package into compliance with the Constitution, where the autonomy of universities is enshrined.

much to the disgust of Senate { HYPERLINK "http://www.gongwer.com/index.cfm?link=bio.cfm&nameid=60101&locid=1" }.

The previous House-passed version was directed at public employers, so the Senate changed the language to focus on public employees.

Ari Adler, spokesperson for House { HYPERLINK "http://www.gongwer.com/index.cfm?link=bio.cfm&nameid=226901&locid=1" } (R-Marshall), said it uses the same definition for a public employee as is found in the Public Employment Relations Act. It defines a public employee as "a person holding a position by appointment or employment in the government of this state." Essentially, by putting the ban on the employee, not the university, the bill works around the constitutional autonomy provided to universities, so goes the argument.

But Sara Wurfel, { HYPERLINK "http://www.gongwer.com/index.cfm?link=bio.cfm&nameid=245801&locid=1" }'s press secretary, said the administration's analysis is that the bill exempts university employees.

"While Gov. Snyder has been focused on efforts that will most help turn around Michigan's economy and this hadn't been on his agenda, his intent will be to sign the bill pending a final review - like every piece of legislation that comes to his desk - that ensures constitutionality and university autonomy," she said.

To that last point, Ms. Wurfel declined to speculate on what Mr. Snyder might do if his administration concludes university employees are affected.

Senate Republican spokesperson Amber McCann said the Senate GOP believes the bill exempts university employees.

Senate { HYPERLINK "http://www.gongwer.com/index.cfm?link=bio.cfm&nameid=60101&locid=1" } (D- East Lansing) said in a statement that Republicans should get their stories straight.

"I don't know if Sen. (Mark) Jansen misled the public yesterday, whether he was misled himself, or whether one of their caucuses simply doesn't understand the bill they are passing, but any one of those explanations should raise a red flag," Ms. Whitmer said. "After springing these bills on us yesterday and ramming them through, it's clear Senate Republicans didn't do their due diligence and fully understand these bills. This kind of 'gotcha' and haphazard legislating is deplorable, especially when these bills have real and immediate consequences for Michigan citizens. I think this legislation is discriminatory and don't support it in any iteration, but it is unsettling to say the least that my Senate Republican colleagues are blindly passing bills without a good grasp on their effects."

A 2004 constitutional amendment barred governments, including universities, from allowing their gay and lesbian employees to include their partner on their medical coverage. Some governments have worked around that ban by creating a live-in partner benefit as opposed to the more commonly known domestic partner benefit. Under such plans, an employee can designate an unrelated adult to be covered under their insurance. That has infuriated conservatives like {

HYPERLINK "http://www.gongwer.com/index.cfm?link=bio.cfm&nameid=175101&locid=1" } (R-Grandville), the sponsor of { HYPERLINK "http://www.gongwer.com/index.cfm?link=legislation_billdetail.cfm&billid=2011HB477001" } .

Supporters charge health and fringe benefits offered to the same-sex partners of public employees are banned under the marriage definition amendment voters passed in 2004, which the courts have ruled extend to benefits.

Aside from universities, the ban also applies to employees of local governments, schools and the state.

{ HYPERLINK "http://www.gongwer.com/index.cfm?link=bio.cfm&nameid=191501&locid=1" } (R-Rochester Hills) urged members to support the bill as it came back from the Senate.

"This is good policy," he said. "It's a good use of taxpayers dollars."

{ HYPERLINK "http://www.gongwer.com/index.cfm?link=bio.cfm&nameid=155801&locid=1" } (D-Lansing) called the bill terrible public policy.

Many major companies allow domestic partner benefits to their employees, so that they can attract the best and the brightest, and the state of Michigan should want to do the same, she said.

Republicans Could Block Suspension Of E.M. Law

The Snyder administration and majority Republicans in the Legislature are considering legislation putting in place a temporary law governing state intervention in financially troubled local governments and schools, a move that would avoid the suspension of the existing law should activists collect enough signatures to put it up for a voter referendum.

Activists say they have collected sufficient signatures to subject PA 4, the Local Government And School District Fiscal Accountability Act, to referendum in November 2012. A poll commissioned by Gongwer News Service in July showed that just 34 percent of voters supported keeping the law while 53 percent said they would vote to reject it.

With several governments under emergency managers operating with the enhanced powers provided by the law, namely the ability to void contracts with that government's employees, there is growing worry in the administration about the possibility of the law's suspension once activists turn in their signatures and the Department of State certifies them. The suspension of the law would lead to the return of PA 72 of 1990, which provided for emergency financial managers with more limited powers than they have now, according to the Department of Treasury.

But if Mr. Snyder signs a new law into place, activists would then have to collect signatures again to put the new law up for referendum and suspension. And they were furious.

suspension of the emergency manager law.

"We expect the people who hold high office to respect the democratic process, respect people's ability to redress and petition the government, and we would expect for them to honor the process," said Greg Bowens, spokesperson for Stand Up for Democracy. "Maybe that's too much of an expectation when you put it on the shoulders of people who created a law that undermines democracy."

Benton Harbor, Flint, Pontiac and the Detroit Public Schools are under emergency managers. Detroit and Inkster are undergoing preliminary financial reviews that could lead to the appointment of an emergency manager. And the Inkster Public Schools has been found to have probable financial stress and is undergoing a full review.

Snyder press secretary Sara Wurfel said talks are underway on what to do.

"We cannot and certainly will not predetermine the answer of what needs to happen in response to a hypothetical event (signatures being submitted and certified). Working with our partners in the Legislature, we will continue to discuss this issue and potential, appropriate actions if and when necessary," she said in an emailed statement. "The Governor feels strongly that he has a responsibility to the citizens and taxpayers of struggling communities and our overall state, and that we simply can't ignore these fiscal crises of communities or school districts and allow them go into bankruptcy. He doesn't believe that's an acceptable option."

Senate { HYPERLINK "http://www.gongwer.com/index.cfm?link=bio.cfm&nameid=55701&locid=1" } (R-Monroe) said there have been some discussions on implementing a stop-gap emergency manager measure, but will work out whether it's possible to substitute something into an existing bill so the Legislature could do that before the holiday break.

"I'm a little nervous about waiting until January to address it," he said.

Lawmakers and the governor have shown their seriousness for tackling financial liabilities, Mr. Richardville said, and the emergency manager law is a key part of that effort. The Legislature needs "every option available to us" to address "a crumbling structure that's existed for years."

"I don't think everyone in Michigan fully understands the crisis some of these communities are in," Mr. Richardville said.

{ HYPERLINK "http://www.gongwer.com/index.cfm?link=bio.cfm&nameid=93801&locid=1" } (R-St. Clair) has introduced { HYPERLINK "http://www.gongwer.com/index.cfm?link=legislation_billdetail.cfm&billid=2011SB86501" }, which would set up a transition emergency manager law should the referendum get on the ballot.

Ari Adler, spokesperson for House { HYPERLINK "http://www.gongwer.com/index.cfm?link=bio.cfm&nameid=226901&locid=1" } (R-Marshall), said they have not decided when they would start the process of moving forward with a temporary measure.

"We have some time," he said. "They haven't turned in all those signatures."

Any bill that does move forward would not include an appropriation in it, so it would not be referendum-proof, and it would also contain a sunset provision. So if voters rejected the existing law, the new one would die once it sunsets.

"We're not subverting the will of the people to have a referendum," he said.

The problem is the limbo that arises if the law is suspended until November, Mr. Adler said. Although Treasury has said the old emergency financial manager law would come back into effect if PA 4 is suspended, some have suggested it might not.

"Cities facing an emergency financial situation don't have eight or nine months to wait until the election solves this question," Mr. Adler said.

They would still have their elected officials though.

"If the democratically elected representatives could solve the financial problem, there wouldn't be an emergency financial manager even there," Mr. Adler said.

Mr. Bolger said in a statement that the state cannot stand by if the law is suspended.

"If needed, the House will pursue a solution that protects citizens, prevents chaos and shields taxpayers from being unfairly saddled with massive debt. That potential solution would not include an appropriation to prevent a referendum," Mr. Bolger said. "It is an important part of responsible leadership that you are willing to have discussions about all possible solutions to a problem, but it is a larger responsibility that you take action only on those solutions that are appropriate. We will continue to discuss this issue with the governor and our partners in the Senate and take appropriate action if and when necessary."

Mr. Bowens said his organization would keep fighting on the issue, no matter what happens.

"They must be pretty scared," he said. "Hopefully, cooler heads will prevail."

Obesity Tracking Rules Move To J.C.A.R.

Rules that would allow the state to track obesity trends among children have been submitted to the Joint Committee on Administrative Rules for final review.

The rules ({ HYPERLINK "http://www.gongwer.com/index.cfm?link=rules_detail.cfm&ruleid=71401" }) would allow height and weight measurements to be entered into the Michigan Care Improvement Registry.

The registry currently tracks immunization rates for children in the state.

The height and weight information would be converted to a body mass index. Health care providers would have access to the aggregate information, as well as other studies and information on the issue finds will help to improve health care for children.

Individual data would be available to researchers, but only in ways that would not allow identification of individual children.

The rules allow parents to request that their child's height, weight and BMI not be included in the registry, and information on a specific person, including the fact that person is listed in the registry, can only be released to the person or a parent or guardian.

The rules are part of { HYPERLINK "http://www.gongwer.com/index.cfm?link=bio.cfm&nameid=245801&locid=1" }'s push to improve health statistics in the state. Michigan has long been among the top states for obesity.

Some conservatives have criticized the plan as intrusive, but the administration has noted that physicians' and parents' participation in the program is purely voluntary.

The Legislature can only stop the rules through the passage of a bill that Mr. Snyder would have to sign, and since Mr. Snyder proposed the idea, he would surely oppose such a bill.

Legislative Black Caucus Files Suit Over House Redistricting Map

The redistricting map signed by { HYPERLINK "http://www.gongwer.com/index.cfm?link=bio.cfm&nameid=245801&locid=1" } will force out half of the minority lawmakers from the city of Detroit in the House, says the Legislative Black Caucus, which is why it filed a federal lawsuit Thursday halt its implementation.

{ HYPERLINK "http://www.gongwer.com/members/Durhal-Fred.jpg" }

The LBC, the Detroit Branch of the NAACP, United Auto Workers and Latin Americans for Social and Economic Development filed the long-anticipated { HYPERLINK "http://www.gongwer.com/public/redistrictinglawsuit11.pdf" } Thursday at the U.S. District Court in Detroit.

{ HYPERLINK "http://www.gongwer.com/index.cfm?link=bio.cfm&nameid=31101&locid=1" } (D-Detroit), chair of the black caucus, said a number of minority Democrats would be pitted against one another in primary elections next year because of the new maps. He said they drew up maps that did not have any primary elections in the Detroit area and Republicans ignored them.

{ HYPERLINK "http://www.gongwer.com/index.cfm?link=bio.cfm&nameid=203801&locid=1" } (R-Shelby Township), chair of the House Redistricting Committee, said the lawsuit was expected and has become the norm following a redistricting effort. While litigation has accompanied past redistricting plans, no lawsuit was filed on the most recent one in 2001.

The suit was filed against Mr. Snyder and { HYPERLINK "http://www.gongwer.com/index.cfm?link=bio.cfm&nameid=52301&locid=1" }. It was assigned to Judge Bernard Friedman, an appointee of former President Ronald Reagan.

"The Republican caucus has used gerrymandering and a manipulation of the process to advance their own agenda at the expense of voters," Rep. Thomas Stallworth (D-Detroit) said in a statement. "Michigan voters deserve equal representation and protection under the law, and this process is a direct violation of both voter rights and civil rights."

Another point in the suit is that it splits the Hispanic community in southwest Detroit. The district with 47 percent Hispanic voters was split in two.

He said this map is meant to reduce the number of Democrats who sit on the House floor following the next election.

"I think this was very political," Mr. Durhal said.

C.O.A. Redistricting Showdown Set Between House, Senate, Snyder

The Senate passed a shell redistricting bill for the Court of Appeals on Thursday without acting on a House measure that would have retained the number of judges at 28 - four more than { HYPERLINK "http://www.gongwer.com/index.cfm?link=bio.cfm&nameid=245801&locid=1" } has supported - setting up final negotiations on the issue between Republicans.

The House court redistricting plan comprised in { HYPERLINK "http://www.gongwer.com/index.cfm?link=legislation_billdetail.cfm&billid=2011HB516001" } kept the number of judges at the current 28, which runs counter to a Judicial Resources Recommendations report issued in August calling for elimination of 45 trial court judges and four members of the appellate court.

Mr. Snyder has indicated his support for those changes.

{ HYPERLINK "http://www.gongwer.com/members/joehune.jpg" }{ HYPERLINK "http://www.gongwer.com/index.cfm?link=bio.cfm&nameid=52901&locid=1" } said the Senate wanted to move the process along by passing a shell redistricting bill.

But the Senate surprisingly took neutral ground when it discharged { HYPERLINK "http://www.gongwer.com/index.cfm?link=legislation_billdetail.cfm&billid=2011SB84901" } from the Redistricting Committee and passed it 26-9 without amendment.

The legislation strikes out all of the counties listed in Court of Appeals districts under current law, which means the Senate took no position on whether 28 or 24 is the magic number.

Senate { HYPERLINK "http://www.gongwer.com/index.cfm?link=bio.cfm&nameid=60101&locid=1" } (D-East Lansing) sponsored an amendment tie-barring the Senate bill to another measure reducing the number of judges.

"We have a golden opportunity to make government smaller," she said, adding the reduction would save $800,000.

Noting she isn't often a proponent of shrinking the government, Ms. Whitmer then joked she wished there were 26 fewer senators than there are currently.

Twenty-five of the 26 Republicans in the chamber rejected her amendment. { HYPERLINK "http://www.gongwer.com/index.cfm?link=bio.cfm&nameid=79201&locid=1" } of Sterling Heights joined the nine Democrats present to vote in favor of the tie-bar.

{ HYPERLINK "http://www.gongwer.com/index.cfm?link=bio.cfm&nameid=52901&locid=1" } (R-Hamburg), the Redistricting Committee chair, said while he admired Ms. Whitmer's call for less government, "this (is) strictly a political tie-bar amendment."

Mr. Hune said he hopes to see the court's redistricted map complete before lawmakers leave town for the holidays and the Senate's action was one step in moving that process along.

"I prefer probably the 28 plan, but there are still ongoing discussions with leadership and the governor's office," he told Gongwer News Service.

WIXOM BATTERY PLANT REINSTATED: The Senate also passed legislation extending tax credits for a battery plant at the site of the old Ford Assembly Plant in Wixom. Townsend Energy Solutions has stepped forward as a potential investor for the site after Xtreme Power and Clairvoyant Energy ended talks with the U.S. Department of Energy over grant money.

The original Michigan Business Tax credits totaled $100 million over four years, but { HYPERLINK "http://www.gongwer.com/index.cfm?link=legislation_billdetail.cfm&billid=2011SB85501" } pares that down to $50 million over the same period of time. Townsend is being asked to create 750 new jobs at the battery production facility, with the state taking back its credits if fewer than 500 jobs are created.

Earlier this year, the Legislature eliminated the MBT except for those companies wishing to still pay it in exchange for continuing state tax breaks.

Democrats Cry Foul Over 'Power Grab' In Oakland County

Saying it was unconstitutional, and a blatant power grab, Democrats objected strongly to passage of { HYPERLINK "http://www.gongwer.com/index.cfm?link=legislation_billdetail.cfm&billid=2011HB518701" }, which changes who gets to draw the political boundaries for the Oakland County Board of Commissioners.

The reapportionment commission is made up of the county clerk, treasurer and prosecutor and the chairs of the two county parties. That has been the makeup for years, but this time the Democrats hold the majority of those seats.

"That was and is the law," { HYPERLINK "http://www.gongwer.com/index.cfm?link=bio.cfm&nameid=204001&locid=1" } (D-Farmington Hills) said.

The bill would give the power of reapportionment to the county commission, where Republicans hold a majority and could draw new boundaries.

{ HYPERLINK "http://www.gongwer.com/index.cfm?link=bio.cfm&nameid=267701&locid=1" } (D-Royal Oak) said this was nothing but an outrage and called it a "highly unusually power grab."

He said the reapportionment plan has been done, and has been upheld by the Court of Appeals, and now the Republicans want to change the game after the game is over.

A unanimous Court of Appeals panel ruled earlier this year that Oakland County's apportionment plan is valid.

The court ruled in In Re Apportionment of Oakland County (COA docket No. 304696), rejecting arguments the apportionment plan violated the Constitution by failing to meet requirements for compactness, as well as being drawn to take partisan advantage and possibly violating the federal voting rights act.

{ HYPERLINK "http://www.gongwer.com/index.cfm?link=bio.cfm&nameid=271501&locid=1" } (R-Oxford), the bill sponsor, said he introduced this as a cost savings measure because it reduces the number of commissioners.

He also said he objected to calling his bill a political move.

Mr. Jacobsen said his plan would remove the leaders of the two county parties from the process, as the voters in the county do not elect them.

The bill was ruled to have passed by a vote of 58-50, but { HYPERLINK "http://www.gongwer.com/index.cfm?link=bio.cfm&nameid=230301&locid=1" } (D-Battle Creek) immediately called for a point of order, saying because the bill only affects one county, it needed to pass by a two-thirds vote as a local act. Republicans then went at ease for about a half hour.

Ms. Barnett said the bill is a special and local act, because it requires Oakland County to have a vote in the county to change the charter to mirror state law, making it not like other bills that simply define an area by population.

Ms. Barnett said the Republicans' only option is to appeal to the Supreme Court.

After huddling for about a half-hour, Republicans emerged and { HYPERLINK "http://www.gongwer.com/index.cfm?link=bio.cfm&nameid=206701&locid=1" } (R-Livonia) ruled the request was not timely and therefore out of order.

Agency Catching Up On Medical Marijuana Applications

The Bureau of Health Professions, now in the Department of Licensing and Regulatory Affairs, received three times the applications it anticipated for medical marijuana certificates, but the agency is now catching up, Director Rae Ramsdell told the House Appropriations Licensing and Regulatory Affairs Subcommittee on Thursday.

Members of the subcommittee had several questions on the effects of the voter-initiated law on local governments and law enforcement, but Ms. Ramsdell said she had no answers to most of those.

"The only thing our office deals with are the licenses," Ms. Ramsdell said in response to a number of questions. "I only operate the registry and do what the law tells me to do."

For instance, committee members wanted to know how employers with zero-tolerance policies for drugs should address employees with medical marijuana certificates. Ms. Ramsdell said that was not under her bureau's purview, but she noted the law does not require employers to provide accommodations.

{ HYPERLINK "http://www.gongwer.com/index.cfm?link=bio.cfm&nameid=281601&locid=1" } (R-Stevensville), chair of the subcommittee, acknowledged that his body's sole responsibility was ensuring the agency is functioning. "Our job is to make sure you have the resources," he said. "If you don't have resources, we need to make adjustments."

Ms. Ramsdell said the current fee schedule for medical marijuana certificates is covering the costs. And she said the fees are in administrative rules, so the department could seek changes to those fees if they are not.

There is still a backlog for issuing certificates (Ms. Ramsdell said the program is currently processing applications from early November) because of the combination of errant projections, lack of printing capacity and an as-yet undersized staff, she said.

Supporters of the legislation had projected as many as 50,000 applicants for a medical marijuana certificate. But the office so far has seen 150,000, Ms. Ramsdell said. And some 47,000 of those included a caregiver who receives a separate certificate.

The certificates have to be addressed within 15 days, but Ms. Ramsdell said there are few reasons to reject an application. Most that are rejected are because they are missing documents or signatures, she said.

The agency does not track diagnoses for medical marijuana applicants, only ensures they have a proper prescription, Ms. Ramsdell said, though the application does include the list of diagnoses for which the drug is allowed.

For caregivers, the primary reason for rejection is a criminal history involving controlled substances.

One of the key things holding the agency back on issuing certificates right now is printer capacity, Ms. Ramsdell said. The agency has two printers with a combined capacity of 800 certificates per day, and then three people are required to stuff the certificate and accompanying letter into an envelope.

And some days the output is cut by equipment failures. "When you're using your printer that much, they do break down," she said.

The bureau is in the process of purchasing a new printer that would increase output to 4,000 per day, and would also stuff the envelopes, she said.

Ms. Ramsdell also wants additional staff to process the applications, but she said right now she is limited by space, not funds. She is looking for larger quarters for the agency.

The agency has been helped in addressing the backlog by a reduction in applications. Ms. Ramsdell said the flow had dropped to about 400 per day from about 800 per day when { HYPERLINK "http://www.gongwer.com/index.cfm?link=bio.cfm&nameid=77201&locid=1" } ordered that dispensaries had to close.

She acknowledged that change had created difficulties for patients to obtain the drug, but she said providing access was not within her agency's duties.

Once they have obtained seeds, each patient is allowed five plants, and each caregiver is allowed five plants per patient. The only restriction is that they be kept in a locked area, she said.

She said there have also been some people return their certificates after a federal ruling that those using medical marijuana cannot qualify for concealed weapons permits.

Richardville: January Docket Will Be Full

January will not be a month for lawmakers to casually make their way through light session days, Senate { HYPERLINK "http://www.gongwer.com/index.cfm?link=bio.cfm&nameid=55701&locid=1" } (R-Monroe) said Thursday.

Gongwer News Service asked whether the remaining education reform bills dealing with schools of choice ({ HYPERLINK "http://www.gongwer.com/index.cfm?link=legislation_billdetail.cfm&billid=2011SB62401" }) and conversion schools ({ HYPERLINK "http://www.gongwer.com/index.cfm?link=legislation_billdetail.cfm&billid=2011SB62001" }) are dead considering the Senate did not pass them in time for the House to take them up yet this year.

Under the Constitution, bills must lie over in each chamber for five days. Thursday would have been the last day for the Senate to pass a Senate-originating bill for the House to vote on it next week before the holiday break.

Mr. Richardville said he does not believe those education bills are dead and said those are measures that would be taken up in January.

The first day of session in 2012 is January 11. { HYPERLINK "http://www.gongwer.com/index.cfm?link=bio.cfm&nameid=245801&locid=1" } has scheduled his State of the State address one week afterward.

But Mr. Richardville told reporters Republican leaders are already working with the administration on Mr. Snyder's 2012-13 fiscal year budget and discussions on that would continue into January.

While the Legislature should wrap up some supplemental appropriations this year ({ HYPERLINK "http://www.gongwer.com/index.cfm?link=legislation_billdetail.cfm&billid=2011HB501401" } and { HYPERLINK "http://www.gongwer.com/index.cfm?link=legislation_billdetail.cfm&billid=2011HB444501" }), Mr. Richardville said he also anticipated a supplemental bill would come up in January as well.

January typically is not a robust time for the legislative agenda, but Mr. Richardville said leadership plans to break that tradition next month.

Plan To Cut 44 Judgeships Receives House Approval

The state's judiciary would shrink under a package of bills approved by the House on Thursday that over a period of years through attrition would see the elimination of 44 trial judges.

"Today is one of those days we get to make history," said { HYPERLINK "http://www.gongwer.com/index.cfm?link=bio.cfm&nameid=266001&locid=1" } (R-Plymouth Township).

Mr. Heise said this package allowed members to live up a campaign promise to downsize government and make it more efficient.

The bills were debated for more than a month in the Judiciary Committee. Only a few changes were made in committee to the package based on the Judicial Resources Recommendations report. That report received the unanimous support of Supreme Court and the Michigan Judges Association, the Michigan Probate Judges Association, the Michigan District Court Judges Association.

Changes to { HYPERLINK "http://www.gongwer.com/index.cfm?link=legislation_billdetail.cfm&billid=2011HB509301" } angered House { HYPERLINK "http://www.gongwer.com/index.cfm?link=bio.cfm&nameid=230301&locid=1" } (D-Battle Creek), the bill sponsor, because she said they were made without her consultation, claiming it was done with political motives. She moved to have her name removed from the bill.

{ HYPERLINK "http://www.gongwer.com/index.cfm?link=bio.cfm&nameid=206701&locid=1" } (R-Livonia), chair of the Judiciary Committee, said he had already apologized for what had happened.

"It was not political, it was a mistake," he said.

Ms. Segal said while it did not change the number of judges eliminated in her community, it did change which judgeship would be eliminated. She said there had been numerous meetings and hearings on the bill and this was added at the last minute.

While the bills ({ HYPERLINK "http://www.gongwer.com/index.cfm?link=legislation_billdetail.cfm&billid=2011HB507101" } , { HYPERLINK "http://www.gongwer.com/index.cfm?link=legislation_billdetail.cfm&billid=2011HB507301" } , { HYPERLINK "http://www.gongwer.com/index.cfm?link=legislation_billdetail.cfm&billid=2011HB507401" } , { HYPERLINK "http://www.gongwer.com/index.cfm?link=legislation_billdetail.cfm&billid=2011HB507501" } , HB 5093, { HYPERLINK "http://www.gongwer.com/index.cfm?link=legislation_billdetail.cfm&billid=2011HB509401" } , { HYPERLINK "http://www.gongwer.com/index.cfm?link=legislation_billdetail.cfm&billid=2011HB510101" } , { HYPERLINK "http://www.gongwer.com/index.cfm?link=legislation_billdetail.cfm&billid=2011HB510201" } , { HYPERLINK "http://www.gongwer.com/index.cfm?link=legislation_billdetail.cfm&billid=2011HB510301" } , { HYPERLINK "http://www.gongwer.com/index.cfm?link=legislation_billdetail.cfm&billid=2011HB510401" } , { HYPERLINK "http://www.gongwer.com/index.cfm?link=legislation_billdetail.cfm&billid=2011HB510501" } , and { HYPERLINK "http://www.gongwer.com/index.cfm?link=legislation_billdetail.cfm&billid=2011HB510701" }) largely passed overwhelmingly, House { HYPERLINK "http://www.gongwer.com/index.cfm?link=bio.cfm&nameid=172301&locid=1" } (D-Mount Morris Township) said the Legislature should follow the recommendations of the judicial report for all the courts.

"If we are truly looking for savings... we should have started last week," he said.

Democrats objected strongly last week, when a Court of Appeals redistricting plan was approved that did not follow the recommendation report that called for the elimination of four judges from that court. They alleged Republicans want to exact an additional partisan advantage to the court by appointing fresh Republican judges to fill the vacancies.

The package, which now heads to the Senate, could save the state millions of dollars in terms of less money spent on salaries, benefits and staff to support the judges.

Those savings would come over time, however, as the judicial reductions will occur as terms expire and judges leave office.

House Commerce Continues Unemployment Reform Debate

Opponents of { HYPERLINK "http://www.gongwer.com/index.cfm?link=legislation_billdetail.cfm&billid=2011SB80601" } and the major changes it makes to the state's unemployment system, said the legislation is based on the premise that jobless benefits are a disincentive to work.

The House Commerce Committee continued debate Thursday and is expected to vote on it next week.

Peter Ruark, senior policy analyst for the Michigan League for Human Services, said that finding the right balance for reform is a challenge, but said the Senate's unemployment bill is the wrong approach.

"We ask this committee to reject or improve changes that cause undue hardship on unemployed workers who are playing by the rules and who are making a good faith effort to find and keep employment when it becomes available," he said.

He said having a strong unemployment insurance system helps the economy.

{ HYPERLINK "http://www.gongwer.com/index.cfm?link=bio.cfm&nameid=277701&locid=1" } asked why money that a business owner has would have not have a multiplier effect if he had it to spend, but if it is taken from him through an unemployment tax and given to someone with out a job, it now has a high multiplier effect when they spend it.

"It really is fascinating economics," Mr. Shirkey (R-Clarklake) said.

The legislation makes several changes for businesses, including increasing the wage base employers pay unemployment taxes on and shortening their experience window from five years to three years, permitting companies to get rid of bad jobless claim years more quickly. Small businesses also can spread their unemployment tax payments out over the year.

For jobless workers, the legislation requires that after 10 weeks of state assistance they take a job if it pays at least their area's prevailing wage or is 120 percent more than their assistance check, even if it's outside of their field of training. They would also have to conduct a "systematic and sustained search for work," with various reports on their progress due to the state.

Workers who fail to keep their training up to date, steal from the business or are let go after missing three consecutive days of work without informing their boss would also not be eligible for jobless benefits under the bill.

Tim Hughes, with the United Auto Workers, said people gain their pride and identity from having a job, and dismissed the notion that people would rather sit on a couch and collect benefits.

"People want to work," he said.

Charlie Owens, state director of the National Federation of Independent Business-Michigan, said it supports the bill.

"The answer to closing this gap is jobs," Mr. Owens said. "Higher payroll taxes will equal less jobs."

House OKs Barring Automatic Public Employee P.A.C. Donations

Public employees could no longer have money automatically deducted from their payroll for the purpose of making donations to a political action committee, under a package of bills approved Thursday by the House on party-line votes.

It would prohibit the action by employees of local governments, school districts and any other public body.

The bills were approved along party lines on the floor as well as in committee earlier this week.

The legislation ({ HYPERLINK "http://www.gongwer.com/index.cfm?link=legislation_billdetail.cfm&billid=2011HB508501" } and { HYPERLINK "http://www.gongwer.com/index.cfm?link=legislation_billdetail.cfm&billid=2011HB508601" }) would essentially put into statute a Supreme Court ruling from earlier this year barring the practice. In that case, the court ruled that Gull Lake Community Schools and its local affiliate of the Michigan Education Association could not enter into an agreement to have the school district deduct payroll from its employees for the purpose of making contributions to the MEA PAC. The MEA was to reimburse the district for all costs associated with the plan.

But the legislation goes further in allowing any resident or business owner in the public body's jurisdiction to bring an action in court against the public body for violating the prohibition.

Fiscal Agencies Report November Revenues Up

Michigan's total revenues for November totaled more than $1.6 billion, according to both the House and Senate Fiscal agencies, though collections for both the income and sales taxes were down.

The difference for the state seems to come mostly from Michigan Business Tax collections. The MBT ends this month.

And though up from November 2010 when total revenues were closer to $1.5 billion, the revenues actually fell short of projections for the month from May's Revenue Estimating Conference. The Senate Fiscal Agency said that was due mainly to reduced collections in the education property tax.

November's collections also represent the first revenue collection for the 2011-12 fiscal year. While the fiscal year began in October, October's revenues are accrued to the 2010-11 fiscal year.

The SFA said revenues for the month totaled $1.611 billion. The HFA counted $1.629 billion. The HFA counted the lottery transfer funds in its total, which was $61.6 million. The SFA counted taxes like those on beer, wine and industrial facilities that totaled $41.4 million.

Both reported net income taxes of $559.8 million, down 4.8 percent compared to a year ago. Gross collections were $573.6 million, down 6 percent, but refunds totaled $13.7 million, down 37 percent.

Sales tax collections totaled $568.5 million, down 0.2 percent. Sales taxes on motor vehicle sales were up by 2.7 percent.

Use tax collections totaled $92.5 million, down 6.6 percent.

And tobacco taxes were down by 0.1 percent to $78.4 million.

State education property tax collections totaled $176.7 million, down 25.7 percent. But the SFA said collections in the tax ran above forecasts through October, so total collections will run roughly on target with projections.

Helping the state out was $83.7 million in MBT collections, even though that was a significant drop in total collections from the year before.

And the real estate transfer tax totaled $10.2 million, up by 0.7 percent from a year ago.

Task Force: Unlimited Numbers, Close Quarters For Mentored Hunts

Mentors would be able to take as many youth hunting with them as they would like, but only two in the group would actually be able to hunt and youth with weapons would have to be in reach of the mentor under recommendations issued Thursday by the Mentored Youth Hunt Workgroup to the Natural Resources Commission.

The commission is expected to back the recommendations, which would be converted to a conservation order up for information and comment at the commission's January meeting and approved by the director after the February meeting. The new rules would then be in place for the 2012 hunting seasons starting in March.

The regulations are part of a new law eliminating the age restriction on hunters, but requiring hunters younger than age 10 to have a mentor who is licensed and experienced.

The workgroup had recommended simply no limit on the number of youth a mentor can take hunting, but accepted recommendations from the audience that they recommend no more than one, but not place a cap on the number of youth.

"I've been in a field with youth," said Jim De Clerck with the Saginaw Field and Stream Conservation Club. "One at a time is all I could handle."

But workgroup members had been particularly concerned about hindering families with only one parent wanting to take the children hunting.

The proposal would allow no more than two weapons per mentor, and any youth carrying a weapon would have to be within arm's length of the mentor.

The mentor would also be responsible for ensuring the weapon was appropriate to the child and would be legally responsible for any of the child's actions while hunting.

The new law would allow any age to hunt deer, and the workgroup recommended that the youth license allow taking of any deer without the usual sex restrictions or the antler point restrictions in place in some areas. Youth under age 13 would still be limited to hunting on private land.

Once the program is in place, the department would be charged with tracking its success, both through counting license sales and tracking some of those hunters over time to see if they remain in the sport.

"Hopefully, somebody 20 years from now will say I'm still hunting because I went out with a mentor in 2012," said Commissioner John Matonich (D-Davison), who chaired the workgroup.

Officials are also hoping to see safety improve as people get involved in the sport younger.

The workgroup recommendation charged the department with creating marketing materials as well as a guide for mentors. While the long-term goal is to get children involved in hunting, the shorter-term effort is to attract adults to the idea of being mentors in the field, said Dennis Fox with the DNR and a member of the workgroup.

Vic Ouellette with the Michigan Hunter Education Instructors Association and a member of the workgroup said members of his group were also interested in creating a free workshop for those considering being mentors.

DNR public information officer Mary Dettloff, also a member of the workgroup, said the department planned to work through organizations that already mentor youth to find adults willing to take children hunting.

Mr. De Clerck recommended the department also work with schools to get children interested in hunting. "The kids are going to take this home and say, 'I want to do this,'" he said.

The NRC Policy Committee on Technology, Information, Marketing and Education, which received the workgroup's presentation on Thursday, is also recommending that the workgroup be continued. Commissioner Mary Brown (D-Kalamazoo), chair of the committee, said the group should meet at least twice a year to review the program and, if needed, make further recommendations.

Snyder Signs Regulatory Tweaks

The Department of Environmental Quality will have at least two of its programs evaluated each year for efficiency and effectiveness under legislation signed Thursday by { HYPERLINK "http://www.gongwer.com/index.cfm?link=bio.cfm&nameid=245801&locid=1" }.

Besides signing { HYPERLINK "http://www.gongwer.com/index.cfm?link=legislation_billdetail.cfm&billid=2011SB27701" } (PA 248), Mr. Snyder signed a package of bills affecting the state's regulatory processes.

He signed { HYPERLINK "http://www.gongwer.com/index.cfm?link=legislation_billdetail.cfm&billid=2011SB27101" } (PA 242) that requires the Office of Regulatory Reinvention to publish a small-business impact statement when promulgating rules and { HYPERLINK "http://www.gongwer.com/index.cfm?link=legislation_billdetail.cfm&billid=2011SB27201" } (PA 243), which requires agencies to consider exempting small businesses from rules and regulations.

Also signed were { HYPERLINK "http://www.gongwer.com/index.cfm?link=legislation_billdetail.cfm&billid=2011SB27301" } (PA 244), excluding legislators from being considered a party to a contested case or any other administrative hearing and { HYPERLINK "http://www.gongwer.com/index.cfm?link=legislation_billdetail.cfm&billid=2011SB27401" } (PA 245), allowing the Joint Committee on Administrative Rules to hold a hearing on rules filed with the Department of State.

And Mr. Snyder signed { HYPERLINK "http://www.gongwer.com/index.cfm?link=legislation_billdetail.cfm&billid=2011SB27501" } (PA 246), which requires the DEQ, upon request, to provide a list specifying the information required to complete a permit application. He also signed { HYPERLINK "http://www.gongwer.com/index.cfm?link=legislation_billdetail.cfm&billid=2011SB27601" } (PA 247) that requires the ORR to post information regarding proposed rules on its website.

All bills were filed with immediate effect.

ALSO SIGNED: Mr. Snyder also signed the following bill:

Trust Fund Recommends $103.4M For Land, Recreation

The Natural Resources Trust Fund Board of Trustees approved 145 applications for land purchases, totaling $63.7 million, and 99 applications for recreation projects, totaling $39.7 million.

Of the grants, 63 percent of the acquisition funds and 93 percent of the recreation funds went to local governments.

The Department of Natural Resources received $4.37 million to purchase private in-holdings within the boundaries of state parks, recreation areas and other project areas around the state. And $1 million was set aside to connect, extend or improve state trailways.

A $3 million grant to the DNR would purchase 2,000 acres in Jackson and Washtenaw counties to create the River Raisin Recreation Area.

The largest grant to a local government was $3.76 million to the Commerce, Walled Lake and Wixom Trailway Management Council for 32.91 acres of railway corridor to be converted to a trail.

Clay Township (St. Clair County) was recommended for $3 million to purchase 440 acres on Harsens Island as a buffer to the St. Clair Flats State Game Area as well as to protect habitat and create recreational areas. Leland Township (Leelanau County) received $2.93 million for 104.5 acres to develop a township natural area.

Among the recreation grants, the board capped awards at $300,000, but it issued 30 such grants around the state. Among those top-funded projects was an effort by the DNR to improve equestrian trails across state lands.

Other projects included making Gallup Park in Ann Arbor largely barrier-free, adding two miles to the Lansing River Trail in Delhi Township (Ingham County), adding parking and trails to Silver Creek Russom Park in Dowagiac, adding a bridge to the M-6 trail in Kent County, repairing the amphitheater and building a canoe launch and boat dock at Flat River Amphitheater Park in Lowell, building a concrete path in Petoskey's Downtown Greenway, and building a synthetic hockey rink at the Tahquamenon Outdoor Recreation Complex in Newberry.

The grants now have to be approved by the Legislature in an appropriations bill.

Committee Roundup

UNDERGROUND STORAGE TANKS: A bill package changing some of the procedures for addressing leaking underground storage tanks was reported by the Natural Resources, Environment and Great Lakes Committee on Thursday.

All bills passed on party-line votes after { HYPERLINK "http://www.gongwer.com/index.cfm?link=bio.cfm&nameid=155301&locid=1" } (D-Ann Arbor) failed to get three amendments adopted she said would give the Department of Environmental Quality more time to review audits, place a stronger liability on owners and operators of the tanks and allow more public scrutiny of private industry standards referenced throughout the bills.

Kendra Everett, aide to { HYPERLINK "http://www.gongwer.com/index.cfm?link=bio.cfm&nameid=74701&locid=1" } (R-Escanaba), said his legislation will provide certainty for the clean-up process and create a causation-based liability for the tanks.

Under { HYPERLINK "http://www.gongwer.com/index.cfm?link=legislation_billdetail.cfm&billid=2011SB53301" }, the DEQ would be banned from promulgating rules to implement the changes, which the department supports.

The main bill is { HYPERLINK "http://www.gongwer.com/index.cfm?link=legislation_billdetail.cfm&billid=2011SB52801" }. The rest of the package is { HYPERLINK "http://www.gongwer.com/index.cfm?link=legislation_billdetail.cfm&billid=2011SB52901" }, { HYPERLINK "http://www.gongwer.com/index.cfm?link=legislation_billdetail.cfm&billid=2011SB53001" }, { HYPERLINK "http://www.gongwer.com/index.cfm?link=legislation_billdetail.cfm&billid=2011SB53101" } and { HYPERLINK "http://www.gongwer.com/index.cfm?link=legislation_billdetail.cfm&billid=2011SB53201" }. The petroleum industry supports the legislation.

Volume #50, Report #252 -- Thursday, December 29, 2011

Newsmaker 2011: Calley Redefines Lt. Governor's Office

When Rick Snyder discussed with then-Rep. Brian Calley the possibility of becoming his running mate during the 2010 gubernatorial campaign, Mr. Calley had one request.

"The one thing I asked for when I joined the ticket was that we talk every day, whether that be in person or on the phone, I felt it was important if I was to represent him and to also help him develop and achieve the initiatives of his upcoming administration, I surely needed to know him and so out of that grew a very close and trusting relationship," Mr. Calley said in a recent interview.

Mr. Snyder and Mr. Calley said from the time Mr. Calley joined the ticket that he would play a much different role than the one traditionally reserved for the lieutenant governor. In the past, the lieutenant governor, besides presiding over the Senate, would be assigned a particular issue by the governor. Instead, Mr. Snyder and Mr. Calley said Mr. Calley would instead serve as a senior adviser on the spectrum of issues facing the administration, and that has occurred.

In a year that saw sweeping change to state policy unlike any in modern times, Mr. Calley is Gongwer News Service's choice as Newsmaker 2011, the year's top newsmaker in Michigan government and politics.

To be sure, Mr. Snyder is the ultimate driver of policy direction from the Executive Office. And none of the major changes to state law this year - tax reform, charter school expansion, public employee benefit changes, the teacher tenure overhaul, to name a few - could have happened without legislators' votes and the leadership of House Speaker Jase Bolger (R-Marshall) and Senate Majority Leader Randy Richardville (R-Monroe) to help produce those votes.

Lt. Governor Brian Calley is Gongwer's choice as Newsmaker

2011. Governor Rick Snyder got the designation in 2010, and then-House Speaker Andy Dillon was the choice in 2009.

But Gongwer selected Mr. Calley because it was the collaborative effort between the legislative and executive branches that produced such fundamental changes, and he was at the nexus of that effort through his key role in shaping administration policy and in winning legislative votes for it.

Mr. Calley, 34, led development of key administration initiatives in private meetings and then made the case for them at public hearings. He redefined the lieutenant governor's post into one of sweeping influence in most major aspects of the administration. He was in the trenches of the Legislature trying to win passage of major issues, succeeding at some and failing at others. So significant is Mr. Calley's place in the Snyder administration that lobbyists say they now must develop a strategy for the lieutenant governor for the first time.

In the past, it would have been useful to speak with the lieutenant governor to get a sense of the governor's thinking on an issue. Now, it's critical to speak with the lieutenant governor because he will have a major role in developing the administration's policies.

Mr. Calley did endure some difficulties this year. He led Mr. Snyder's effort to win legislative approval for authorization of a new bridge connecting Detroit and Windsor, Ontario, that resulted in the one major defeat for the governor.

His daughter, Kara, who has battled a heart condition since her birth in early 2010, nearly died after suffering a series of heart attacks during the summer, but has since recovered and now appears to be "out of the woods," Mr. Calley said, although she will still need to be monitored.

Mr. Calley's major role continues. He is overseeing the development of a plan to eliminate the personal property tax and replace most of the revenue for local governments.

"He's been a very important part of our team. Brian's done a great job, and I really appreciate our partnership," Mr. Snyder said in an interview. "I believe we've done better than traditionally you'd see with lieutenant governors in terms of making them an integral, critical part of our team. It's interesting. I don't know how people could historically not look at involving the lieutenant governor that way because you have finite resources and to take one of the best and brightest people in state government and not put them to work or ask them to do a lot didn't make any sense to me."

Senate Majority Leader Randy Richardville (R-Monroe) said while it's easy to pick a lieutenant who isn't relevant, Mr. Calley is the opposite of that and Mr. Snyder should be credited for the pick.

"In this case Brian adds a lot of value," Mr. Richardville said. "He and the governor don't look at the world the same way, so I give Rick Snyder credit for bringing someone in who does look at things differently, does have more empathy for what it takes to get elected to the Legislature."

But Democrats have bristled occasionally at Mr. Calley. Senate Minority Leader Gretchen Whitmer (D-East Lansing) ripped him for a lack of professionalism after he delivered a highly unusual statement from his spot on the Senate rostrum praising the tax legislation before announcing his tie-breaking vote.

"Shall we not pretend that the status quo has been some resounding success for us? Or shall we take a chance on the future," he said then.

And Ms. Whitmer disagrees on his level of influence.

"The lieutenant governor was more than willing to cast the tie-breaking vote that raised taxes on middle class families and seniors, but since that time he seems content to simply be a spectator when it comes to getting the Republican majority to go along with the governor's agenda," she said. "Where was he when Republicans couldn't even get the NITC legislation out of committee? Where was he when the Republicans didn't even give his boss' infrastructure plan a passing thought? For someone that came out of the legislature, Lt. Governor Calley doesn't seem to be able to have the level of influence into the legislative process that many people probably expected him to."

One of Mr. Calley's long-sought priorities, legislation that would mandate insurance companies cover treatment for autism, remains in the mix and is expected to come up in the Senate for action early next year, as was first reported in Gongwer.

House Minority Leader Richard Hammel (D-Mount Morris Township) said Mr. Calley has worked personally with several of his caucus members on specific issues important to him such as autism coverage.

Mr. Hammel said he doesn't mind that, and in fact welcomes it.

"I'm very comfortable with him meeting folks that are champions of a particular issue, or a vice chair of a committee, as long as we sit down together and start discussing strategy when it comes to moving forward," he said.

Republicans have had control of the governor's office and both houses of the Legislature several times in recent history, notably the 1995-96, 1999-2000 and 2001-02 legislative terms. And considerable new laws were enacted in all three of those terms, especially in 1999-2000. But never have Republicans been quite as in sync as they are now. In 1995-96, the GOP had a tenuous 56-54 House majority (with one of the votes belonging to the mercurial then-Rep. David Jaye and a large group of moderates in the caucus) Both the 1999-2000 and 2001-02 terms saw bad blood between top House and Senate Republicans, as well as a remaining contingent of moderates on labor issues, that prevented the type of fundamental overhaul seen in 2011.

Mr. Calley said he could not opine on why this term saw more sweeping changes than previous eras of Republican control because he was not in Lansing then. But he said communication has been a key to this year's success.

"Even today, we put a very high premium on communication between the principles, and I think that makes all the difference," he said. "The majority leader, the speaker and the governor and I are all in communication on a very regular basis. But we also have members of our team that are in communication on a very regular basis on a staff-to-staff level. As long as everybody remains dedicated to working things out, working out differences and being focused on results in the end, you'll continue to see a highly productive system."

And Mr. Calley credits the overall Snyder team for the success it has enjoyed so far.

"There are very few issues or instances that are handled by a (single) person here on this team," he said. "So what happens, while any one of us might take the lead on a particular issue, there's fingerprints of everybody in this office involved in almost every initiative that moves through."

CALLEY'S YEAR STARTS WITH A BANG: If there was any doubt that Mr. Snyder's plans to make Mr. Calley an integral part of his administration were campaign rhetoric, the governor quickly put them to rest.

Mr. Calley would play a critical role in developing the most significant policy the administration would put forth - the replacement of the Michigan Business Tax with a 6 percent corporate income tax and a massive restructuring of the personal income tax that would eliminate most credits, most notably the long-time major exemptions for retirement income.

Usually, the budget director presents the governor's budget recommendation to the House and Senate Appropriations committees, but the gravity of Mr. Snyder's proposals was such that the governor himself would give an overview. Budget Director John Nixon would go into greater detail on the budget aspects. And Mr. Calley would give the detailed presentation on the tax plan. From then on, Mr. Calley was ubiquitous on the tax legislation: answering questions at the House Tax Policy Committee, which met for weeks on the legislation; meeting privately with legislators on the issue; and then asking - and receiving - the ability to cast the decisive tie-breaking vote in the Senate.

"That was a very practical decision early on because of the relationship I had with people in the Legislature and then the experience I had with the system particularly as it pertained to tax policy," Mr. Calley said of the role he played. "When it comes to proposing something as substantial as the tax reforms of 2011, to engage and initiate the type of dialogue required at the legislative level I think did require some pretty strong relationships."

Indeed, Mr. Calley had been the ranking Republican on the House Tax Policy Committee and was involved in the development of the MBT. During the campaign, Democrats tried to hit Mr. Snyder for the seeming disconnect between naming one of the players in developing the tax he compared to the movie "Dumb and Dumber" as his running mate, but like virtually everything else the Democrats tried, it did not stick.

Mr. Calley found himself under the microscope a bit in the opening days of the administration. In early February, about a week before the Snyder team would unveil its tax and budget recommendations, Mr. Calley told the Holland Area Chamber of Commerce that Mr. Snyder's proposals would hit Lansing like an atomic bomb. The Holland Sentinel was covering Mr.

Calley's speech and word of the lieutenant governor's comments spread quickly to the point that Mr. Snyder's press office called his choice of words "extremely unfortunate."

The flap faded and Mr. Calley made light of his comments at the tax and budget presentation.

One key to victory, Mr. Calley said, was making the debate about the basic principles of the tax code as opposed to any one particular change.

"The questions we always came back to was does this make this tax more simple or less simple, does it make it more fair or less fair or does it make it more efficient or less efficient," he said.

But that philosophy would be put to the test when considering whether to end the state's generous exemptions for retirement income. The state had never taxed pensions from public sector jobs, and retirement income from the private sector was subject to a huge exemption of $45,120 for singles ($90,240 for married couples). Mr. Snyder proposed ending those exemptions.

"I would say that was the biggest gut-check test of how dedicated we were to the principles that were laid out," Mr. Calley said. "Did we really believe that taxation should be fair and across the board to stand for everybody or not as one of our principles? I'm very proud that the team came to the conclusion that we needed to be consistent, we needed to take ownership of our current responsibilities, all of us here in Michigan and do so for the good of the next generation."

Negotiations with the Legislature produced a compromise. Persons born before 1946 would continue receiving their current exemptions while those born afterward would get a reduced exemption.

The other area where the administration had to budge from its original proposal was on the Earned Income Tax Credit, which Mr. Snyder initially had proposed eliminating. State residents have been able to claim a credit on their state income taxes equal to 20 percent of the credit they received on their federal taxes, providing help to the working poor.

Liberal organizations mounted a furious push to save the EITC. Mr. Calley said it had been discussed extensively prior to the unveiling of the tax plan.

"It was one of those areas that could have gone either way," he said. "We debated it internally substantially before it went live with the Legislature, and when it became clear that there was a critical mass in the Legislature that wanted to preserve a portion of it, it wasn't a very tough sell to the administration."

The credit was cut back to 6 percent instead of 20 percent.

BRIDGE: If the tax plan's passage was the high point of the year for Mr. Calley, then the low point was the Legislature's rebuffing of the administration's efforts to win authorization for the Detroit River International Crossing, which the administration renamed the New International Trade Crossing.

The Senate Economic Development Committee, after weeks of hearings on SB 410, rejected the legislation, which appears all but dead. The legislation seemed to fall apart October 19 when the committee was expected to vote, but the chair, Sen. Mike Kowall (R-White Lake Township), abruptly and surprisingly adjourned the meeting moments after gaveling it to order, complaining no one had showed him the revised version of the bill.

"I was surprised. When you have a member that offers a substitute, you can't really control for all the different factors, who they talk to and so forth," Mr. Calley said of Mr. Kowall's adjourning of the meeting without a vote. "I don't think I really fully understood it at the time, and I guess I don't know today what the real problem was there, but as soon as it was clear that there was some sort of a breakdown in communication, that everyone was committed to talking and doing so in expedited fashion. And that did occur after that point."

That's at odds with what legislators in both parties said occurred. They described at the time that the Snyder administration then essentially discontinued its involvement in the legislation, which the committee defeated the next day.

Now the focus is largely on what most expect will be the administration's back-up plan to authorize the bridge, perhaps some type of interlocal agreement that avoids the need for legislative approval.

The speculation on that subject was unleashed August 4 as Mr. Snyder and Mr. Calley began a tour of the farmer's market on the Capitol lawn. Mr. Snyder had answered a few questions from reporters on the pleasant, sunny day on the sidewalk along Capitol Avenue not far from the statue memorializing former Governor Austin Blair.

Once Mr. Snyder wrapped up his comments to reporters and began visiting some of the tents at the market, reporters descended on Mr. Calley.

It was during this exchange that Mr. Calley would reveal publicly that there were several other ways to authorize the bridge besides legislation. The comments, reported in Gongwer News Service (See Gongwer Michigan Report, August 4, 2011), began to gain traction and seemed to raise the question of why legislators should cast a vote for the bridge, incurring the wrath of the Moroun family, owners of the rival Ambassador Bridge and willing to spend a fortune perhaps to make their re-elections difficult.

When Gongwer asked Mr. Calley recently about the exchange, he appeared to recall it well, remembering which reporter asked him about other options for the bridge and it seemed to burn him that his remarks were perceived as significant.

"I just acknowledged that the Granholm administration had considered other ways, but we were still very committed to our proposal," he said. "It wasn't really new information. It had been extensively reported in the past. I'm not really sure why me stating something of that nature would be a decision point for anybody else simply because it's not like it was new information."

But to most bridge-watchers, Mr. Calley's comments were significant. No one from the Snyder administration had spoken publicly in such detail about the possibility. During the Granholm administration, there was a general thought that perhaps then-Governor Jennifer Granholm might ask the federal government to retake control of the bridge project and build the bridge without having to have Michigan's approval, but there was never any serious movement in that direction.

What is striking about the August 4 exchange is that Mr. Calley volunteered the information and was not initially directly asked about other options. One reporter was pressing Mr. Calley on whether the votes would materialize in the Senate to pass the legislation.

"What I'm telling you is that this bridge will happen," he said that day. "There's a lot of ways the bridge can happen, the bridge will happen. My favorite way is the way that we proposed it the first time. And so we're going to continue on that path."

Several other questions on the bridge not involving other options were asked before Mr. Calley was asked to expand on what other ways the bridge could happen. "There's a half a dozen different ways," he said. "I'm not going to get into describing all the different ways that it could happen because I'm still very committed to the way that we proposed, which I think is the best way, but it certainly is not the only way."

In an interview with Michigan Public Television this month, Mr. Snyder acknowledged making mistakes on the bridge, but refused to call Mr. Calley's comments one of them and defended his lieutenant governor.

Of not being able to win approval of the bridge this year, something the Snyder administration had wanted, Mr. Calley was sanguine.

"It's a four-year term, and so while it's convenient to consider time periods such as a year-end, that's really an artificial block of time, and I'm still very confident that the bridge project will get done, and it's just a matter of working through the process," he said. "Relentless positive action applies to this issue more than any other."

ANTICIPATION BUILDS ON PERSONAL PROPERTY TAX: Mr. Calley said when the administration unveils its proposal on how to eliminate the personal property tax, which applies local property taxes to business equipment and earmarks most of the money to local governments with the rest going to the School Aid Fund, it will be notable for how little objection it raises.

Mr. Calley said he expects major stakeholders to support it. He said he has solicited and received input from everyone from local government associations to individuals with experience or reliance on the tax and the business community.

"I believe that when we do release the personal property tax plan that it's going to be one that has wider-spread support than you might think based on past efforts to make substantial changes there," he said.

Mr. Calley said he has spent a considerable amount of time researching court decisions on the issue.

"So much of property tax law these days is filled in (by) the courts that I've spent a lot of time on court decisions this year as well to try and get ahead of some of the ambiguous questions that have tripped us up in the past and created a lot of litigation," he said. "It's important that when we do make a change that it be well-defined and that we fill in as many blanks as we can possibly anticipate so that there can be some consistency and reliance on what it looks like going forward."

Mr. Calley had planned that the administration would unveil its personal property tax plan sooner. But everything changed in late July when his young daughter Kara, not even 2 years old, nearly died.

"I had intended to spend a great deal of time last summer on development of that plan," Mr. Calley said of the personal property tax. "I ended up spending a lot of that time in the hospital with my daughter."

DAUGHTER'S HEALTH SCARE 'THE SORT OF THING YOU TAKE MINUTE BY MINUTE': Mr. Calley and his wife, Julie, were taking Kara to the University of Michigan hospital for a heart catheterization so physicians could figure out how to repair a leaking valve in her heart.

As was the norm for Mr. Calley, he was posting regular updates about the situation on his Facebook page, including a heartbreaking picture of Kara crying in Ms. Calley's arms about being back at the hospital. But Mr. Calley's posts suddenly turned alarming with a post at 6:15 p.m. July 26.

"Urgent Prayer Request: My heart is breaking as I write this. Kara has crashed twice. What was thought to be routine is at a very life threatening stage. Kara is fighting for her life right now. They may put her on the heart and lungs machine soon," Mr. Calley posted.

Mr. Calley continued with several posts throughout the coming days with a stream of dispatches explaining she had suffered a series of heart attacks that riveted the Capitol community and beyond.

Mr. Calley had decided to start using his Facebook account as a way to keep friends and family abreast of Kara's health after she was born and her heart condition came to light.

"I spent so much time out in the hallway calling people, friends and family, letting them know how Kara was doing, that it seemed like I was never with her," he said. "And so I told them all I wasn't making any more phone calls. I was going to do updates on Facebook. 'If you want to know what was happening, then look at Facebook.' So I kept that up throughout the whole process. The main difference was when Kara had the issues in the summer, there were just more Facebook friends, so there was a lot more interest."

Indeed, by last summer, Mr. Calley had gone from a relatively unknown state representative from Portland in early 2010 to the lieutenant governor with thousands of people following his Facebook posts.

"The word I usually use to describe that time period is brutal," he said of the time from July 26 until Kara stabilized. "It's kind of a helpless situation where you have to totally rely on other people to really know what they're doing and to get it right. ... It was just the sort of thing you take minute by minute, and while before it was difficult for me to imagine like how could I ever handle that because nobody can ever just handle it, but somehow you do because you have to."

The Calleys traded off with one staying at the hospital with Kara and the other home with their other two children, Collin and Reagan.

Kara is "doing great now," Mr. Calley said, with her physician saying in November he thought she was "out of the woods" and probably no longer would need surgery.

"I didn't realize until days later how many people around the state and really around the whole country were pulling for her, praying for her," he said. "It was a pretty amazing experience. I'm glad that my family opened up as much as we did during that time because now anywhere I go in the state - I really do mean anywhere, including in Calumet when I was up there last summer - that people are asking about her and how's she doing and are concerned and just seem to have a real interest. It's pretty special."

Top 10 Laws Of The Year

The year 2011 saw a rush of major legislation becoming law not seen since the 1960s. With this story, Gongwer News Service ranks the top 10 most significant new laws enacted this year.

In some cases, because a particular issue involved a series of bills and thus technically more than one law, they are grouped together.

10. ANTI-BULLYING BILL FINALLY PASSES: While passage of a measure requiring schools to establish anti-bullying policies escaped previous Legislatures, the impetus for getting a bill passed this time came in early October during a lengthy debate in the Senate about eliminating the cap on charter schools. Governor Rick Snyder had called for the legislation in his special education message in April, but it had not seemed to get real legislative traction.

Democrats put a tie-bar amendment up and the heat was on since Sen. Rick Jones (R-Grand Ledge) already had his anti-bullying measure, SB 137, waiting on the floor. The Senate finally took that bill up in early November, but Republicans at the last minute substituted the legislation exempting statements based on religious or moral convictions, which they later defended as protecting free speech. But Democrats leaped at that and declared it a "license to bully." Senate Minority Leader Gretchen Whitmer's (D-East Lansing) floor speech became a YouTube sensation.

While the bill won Senate passage, the House Republican spokesperson declared it toxic after national media ridicule ensued.

The House took up its own anti-bullying bill, HB 4163, sponsored by another Republican, Rep. Phil Potvin of Cadillac. That bill didn't contain the religious exemption. The Senate took that legislation up after the Thanksgiving break and Mr. Snyder signed it during an emotional ceremony earlier this month (PA 241).

9. ITEM PRICING REQUIREMENT ELIMINATED: In the 35 years Michigan had required retailers to place a price sticker or tag on every item of merchandise for sale, the law was hailed a handy tool for consumers and reviled by businesses as a burdensome regulation leading to having to hire staff simply to tag items. Business groups tried for years to repeal the requirement and failed every time, not coming even close to getting a bill signed into law.

But Mr. Snyder made ending the requirement part of his State of the State message in January, and the Legislature passed it (HB 4158, PA 15) with a remarkable lack of drama just two months later. The requirement officially ceased September 1.

8. CHARTER SCHOOL CAP PHASED OUT: In his April special message on education, Mr. Snyder said he wanted to eliminate the cap on charter schools in districts where at least one school was failing academically, but Sen. Phil Pavlov (R-St. Clair) decided to go for it all when he introduced SB 618 abolishing the entire limit on university-authorized charters.

The Senate passed the legislation in early October, but it clearly faced a more difficult road in the House and during the ensuing weeks it was unclear what it would take to actually get the bill done.

In the meantime, Rep. Paul Scott (R-Grand Blanc), the House Education Committee chair, got recalled and was replaced by Rep. Tom McMillin (R-Rochester Hills). Speaker Jase Bolger also made some last-minute changes to the committee's line-up that sparked comments he was stacking the deck in favor of getting the bill through.

But the real drama unfolded on the House floor on one of the last days of session in December. The chamber went through nearly 30 amendments before passing the bill, which was altered to phase out the cap by 2015. Starting next year, the charter school cap doubles from 150 to 300 (PA 277). Now the question will be just how many schools universities will seek to authorize.

7. WORKERS' COMPENSATION ALTERED: Business groups won a major victory when the Republican-controlled Legislature backed changes to how workers' compensation is determined by streamlining statute to current case law.

HB 5002 (PA 266) says injured workers are capped at 80 percent of their after-tax wage and their wage-earning capacity is determined by reasonably available, suitable jobs, regardless of whether an injured worker earns those wages or not.

Democrats labeled this "phantom wages," but after police and fire fighters won an exemption for themselves in the Senate, the bill was greased for passage.

While passage was narrow in the Legislature, it wrapped up a major issue for businesses, which pay the entire cost of workers' compensation insurance. Mr. Snyder signed the bill last week.

6. MICHIGAN ISSUES BONDS TO PAY UNEMPLOYMENT DEBT: After years of racking up a heavy debt to cover unemployment benefits, the Legislature decided to enter the bond market and to pay back the federal government, becoming the second state behind Texas to take such an action.

But along with the bonding measures, SB 483 (PA 267) and SB 484 (PA 268), lawmakers also approved several changes to how unemployment benefits are awarded through SB 806 (PA 269).

Business groups gave into a slightly higher taxable wage base for jobless benefits, which would remain in place until the trust fund reaches $2.5 billion. But unemployed workers will now have 10 weeks before they are forced to take a job if it pays at least the prevailing wage in their area or is 120 percent more than their benefits check from the state.

The legislation was another major issue wrapped into the fast-paced last three weeks of session, and most observers will recall that Democrats in the Senate successfully got the 205-page bill read out loud, which took four hours and 18 minutes.

These moves came on top of action earlier in the year to reduce the number of state unemployment benefits from 26 weeks to 20 (HB 4408, PA 14).

5. REDISTRICTING: Republicans controlled all aspects of the decennial redrawing of boundaries for the state's U.S. House districts as well as lines for state House and Senate seats (HB 4780, PA 128, and SB 498, PA 129) and the Court of Appeals, the last of which is still not done. The decisions for the U.S. House have had enormous implications with two young Democratic incumbents, U.S. Rep. Hansen Clarke of Detroit and U.S. Rep. Gary Peters of Bloomfield Township, squaring off in a Democratic primary next year to see whose career in Washington continues. The lines also softened up the political base of U.S. Rep. John Conyers (D-Detroit), causing a long line of aspirants to declare they would challenge him in the Democratic primary.

And Republicans appeared to set up some trouble for U.S. Rep. Thaddeus McCotter (R-Livonia), making his seat based more in Oakland, instead of Wayne, County, prompting Sen. Mike Kowall (R-White Lake Township) to challenge him in next year's Republican primary.

Meanwhile, decisions made for the state House lines put the careers of several legislators in jeopardy. Several Detroit representatives were lumped into the same districts. Rep. Rick Olson (R-York Township) was drawn into a heavily Democratic seat while Rep. Lisa Brown (D-West Bloomfield) was drawn into a heavily Republican one.

4. TEACHER TENURE TOUGHENED: Republicans had long loathed teacher tenure, the process by which teachers of a certain level of seniority gained statutory protections making it extremely difficult to fire them. Mr. Snyder proposed huge changes, but not outright elimination, and succeeded in getting the legislation into law.

The legislation makes it easier for school districts to fire teachers considered ineffective with three consecutive ineffective ratings for a tenured teacher being cause for dismissal. The legislation would allow the dismissal of probationary teachers at any time and the dismissal or demotion of teachers on continuing tenure for a reason that was not arbitrary and capricious instead of the current mandate that firings must be for reasonable and just cause. The probationary period would grow from four years to five years.

The package HB 4625 (PA 101), HB 4626 (PA 100), HB 4627 (PA 102) and HB 4628 (PA 103) also spells out explicitly that when schools have to reduce workforce for financial reasons, they will put an emphasis on ensuring that effective teachers remain on the job as opposed to laying off teachers based on seniority.

The ripple effect of the issue was enormous. Less than a week after the Legislature gave the legislation final approval, a furious Michigan Education Association declared the tenure law the "tipping point" for it to get involved in efforts to recall members of the House and immediately poured in the resources necessary to put Mr. Scott up for recall. In November, in large part because of the MEA's efforts, voters ousted Mr. Scott, making him the first legislator in 28 years to be recalled.

3. NEW EMERGENCY MANAGER LAW: The first big proposal the Snyder administration sought from the Legislature led to some of the largest protests in years at the Capitol and even some arrests when people refused to leave the Rotunda after the building had closed. The legislation, sponsored by Rep. Al Pscholka (R-Stevensville), substantially increased the powers of what were then called emergency financial managers, empowered under PA 72 of 1990 to run cities and school districts deemed to be in financial emergency by the state.

But under the new law (HB 4214, PA 4), the renamed emergency managers would have the one major power their predecessors lacked - the ability to modify or void contracts with the community's employees. That's what prompted unions to mobilize and dominate the Capitol lawn for most of the spring. They also would have the power, though needing gubernatorial approval, to dissolve the community. The law is the subject of an effort to put it up for referendum next year and a federal lawsuit.

The four entities under emergency financial managers - Benton Harbor, Detroit Public Schools, Ecorse and Pontiac - are now operating under emergency managers. Flint became the first city to undergo an emergency manager after the law took effect, and other communities - most notably Detroit - are undergoing reviews that could lead to emergency managers there.

2. PUBLIC EMPLOYEE BENEFITS ON THE FRONTBURNER: Michigan was no Wisconsin when it came to focusing on labor unions, but lawmakers here came at that group from various angles throughout the year.

First up was the benefits for unrelated adults living with state employees. The Civil Service Commission approved it, but the Senate sought to overturn the new benefit by adopting SCR 9. However, the House failed to muster the two-thirds vote needed to concur in the spring.

But Republicans prevailed in a second round on that issue when they decided to prohibit public entities from giving employees those benefits. A change in the Senate led to confusion over whether HB 4770 and HB 4771 extended to employees at universities, which are given autonomy in the Constitution, but Mr. Snyder ultimately signed one of the bills (PA 297) with a lengthy explanation of why universities are exempt. The other bill was vetoed over a technical issue, but does not alter the result. State employees were not affected because the Civil Service Commission controls their compensation under the Constitution.

Public employees were also in the spotlight as the Legislature debated how to control local health care costs, which ultimately led to enactment of a hard dollar cap on how much they could spend on those benefits or split the cost 80/20 with their employees in SB 7 (PA 152). But extending that to state civil service employees and university employees through a constitutional amendment in SJR C ultimately failed in the House because a two-thirds vote is required.

Over the year, the Snyder administration also sought $145 million in concessions from state employee unions that were calculated into the 2011-12 budget, but that effort fizzled out. Unions did negotiate a new contract that calls for some pay increases in 2012 and 2013, as well as employees paying more for their health care.

1. TAX AND BUDGET REFORMS: That Mr. Snyder prevailed in receiving approval essentially of his exact proposal to replace the Michigan Business Tax with the 6 percent Corporate Income Tax was big enough. It marks a sea change in how Michigan taxes businesses, going from a value-added system to one based purely on profits. But Mr. Snyder took the reform to an even more dramatic level when he wiped out the state's entire tax incentive program for businesses, replacing it with a grant-based system.

And for added measure, he and the Legislature negotiated massive changes to the state's 44-year-old personal income tax. For the first time, pensions from public sector jobs will be subject to the tax. The generous exemption for retirement income from private sector jobs ($45,120 for singles, $90,240 for married couples) drops to $20,000 for singles and $40,000 for married couples. The Earned Income Tax Credit falls from equaling 20 percent of a filer's federal EITC to 6 percent. An array of tax credits for filers making donations to a variety of institutions ceases. The income tax rate, scheduled to drop to 3.9 percent, instead only declines from 4.35 to 4.25 percent. The $600 per child credit for child care expenses ends. And the Homestead Property Tax Credit is drastically scaled back.

Overall, HB 4361 (PA 38) means a fundamental reshaping of how the state raises revenue, sharply reducing how much businesses contribute and increasing how much individuals pay.

That plan was married to wholesale changes in the budget that was finalized for the 2011-12 fiscal year on May 26, the earliest conclusion to a budget in 30 years. Among the major moves in the budget was a $300 per pupil cut to K-12 schools (although that cut drops to as low as $100 for schools meeting certain requirements), a 15 percent cut to aid to public universities, a huge change to revenue sharing that made less money available to those communities and only if they met a series of mandates, and cutting off cash assistance to those on welfare beyond the five-year federal limit. Mr. Snyder surprised many with his decision not to cut Medicaid and won approval of a new 1 percent tax on health insurance claims to ensure he could fulfill that goal.

Jeffries Reflects On Career Made At S.F.A.

Improvement in the U.S. economy is expected to be a marathon, not a sprint, which is the outlook 34-year Senate Fiscal Agency veteran Ellen Jeffries takes to the Revenue Estimating Conference in two weeks.

Ms. Jeffries, who became director nearly a year ago, has made her career at the fiscal agency, first starting out on the budgets for commerce, labor and licensing and regulation and then moving on to higher education appropriations.

In a recent interview, she joked about being the best person to head up the higher education budget - because she's a graduate of Hillsdale College, which as a private school receives no state government aid.

But Ms. Jeffries said she's always been intrigued by public policy, and that is why she pursued her bachelor's degree in political economy at Hillsdale and a master's degree in political science from the University of Chicago.

She came back to Michigan to be closer to her family in the southeast part of the state and the fiscal agency was a perfect fit. For 20 of her 34 years, she served as deputy director under then-director Gary Olson.

"I just was always interested in that...not to be a politician," Ms. Jeffries quickly notes.

But Ms. Jeffries is fiercely loyal to the Legislature and its inhabitants both old and new. Most members are dedicated to public policy but don't get much appreciation from the public, she said.

While the role of the fiscal agency hasn't changed, Ms. Jeffries said its staff is doing more with fewer people and serves a greater purpose because of term limits.

"When Senator (Harry) Gast was the chair of Appropriations for 20 years ... he had so much he already knew. In the Senate, we're a little luckier because we get House members (for the most part)," she said.

Ms. Jeffries described the fiscal agency's role as giving members the best information so they can make informed decisions.

"The Legislature needs more non-partisan staff, not fewer," she said when asked about whether there should be one fiscal agency serving both chambers.

Ms. Jeffries said besides consolidating to one director, there probably wouldn't be much savings because the Legislature would need just as much staff as there are now, which are a lot less than 20 years ago. The SFA has 20 employees after just hiring two new people, which is down from the mid-30s they had in the 1990s.

As the state's economy tanked over the past 10 years, the SFA was noticeably more conservative with its revenue estimates than the House Fiscal Agency or state treasurer, but Ms. Jeffries noted its May estimate was higher than the others'. So far, revenues have hit a bit closer to the SFA estimates, but Ms. Jeffries said, "Believe me, we can wrong the next time too.

"Everybody tries to be right when they make the estimates, and it's a hard thing to do," she said.

While it does appear the country and state economies are improving, Michigan's revenues are still nowhere near where they have been. Still, Ms. Jeffries said providing a more positive outlook for the state budget is better than constantly having to revise estimates downward.

"Economics is a dismal science," she jokes. "It is much nicer to go into the consensus and say we are going to have a little more revenue."

Having been around, Ms. Jeffries remembers when the state didn't have a Revenue Estimating Conference before 1991. Caseloads were estimated unofficially in May or June as lawmakers finished up the budget, but they weren't always accurate.

"The year would start and you would have a problem," she said.

Having a Revenue Estimating Conference "really added discipline to the process."

There has never been a year since the conferences began that a consensus wasn't reached and Ms. Jeffries said she can't imagine that would ever happen.

Like the Legislature, the three main participants of the conference have to compromise.

Audit Criticizes D.M.V.A. Financial Practices

The Department of Military and Veterans Affairs committed several significant deficiencies in its financial practices, according to an audit released Thursday.

The audit is actually a revised version of one issued in 2008 looking at activity from October 1, 2005, through September 30, 2007. The auditor general decided to revisit the audit after becoming aware of a material misstatement in department records that affected the previous audit.

Auditors cited about $7 million in questioned costs in the department.

The audit found that the department did not ensure it prepared its schedule of expenditures of federal awards in compliance with federal rules and state policies, leading to a material misstatement in a previous audit report and the risk for potential future misstatements, the audit said.

The department lacked a formal process to ensure a complete and accurate reporting of federal awards expended on its schedule of expenditures of federal awards, notably by not identifying and separately reporting $44.4 million in federal awards expended from the Military Construction, National Guard Program for the two-year period ending September 30, 2007. It also omitted $993,899 in federal awards expended from the Grants to States for Construction of State Home Facilities on its federal awards schedule for the two-year period ending September 30, 2007.

Another omission from the federal awards schedule was $2.27 million spent on behalf of the National Guard Military Operations and Maintenance Projects for the two-year period ending September 30, 2007.

The audit criticized the department for lacking a process to reconcile the federal awards schedule to its accounting records to ensure the schedule was accurate and complete, leading to overstatements and an understatement. Additionally, the department did not prepare its federal awards schedule in the way required by the state's Financial Management Guide, resulting in the department overstating how much it spent.

The department also needs to improve its process for requesting federal reimbursement to help ensure timely collection of federal funds, the audit said. The lag in federal transmission of reimbursements led to the department having a negative quarterly cash position of $8.325 million and deprived the state of interest-earning opportunities.

Lack of documentation verifying food purchases at the Grand Rapids Home for Veterans also caught the eye of auditors.

"During the two-year period ended September 30, 2007, GRHV purchased $3.1 million of food related items from its food vendor. Without sufficient policies and procedures regulating the purchase, receipt, and use of food items at GRHV, the department lacks control over its food inventory. This situation could result in the state's limited resources being used inappropriately," the audit states.

The audit also found the veterans' home did not maintain and safeguard its hard copy accounting records. Management told auditors records were "inadvertently" sent to a document destruction firm in July of 2007 although state law says records should be kept a minimum of five years.

"We could not validate that the accounting records were destroyed," auditors said.

The audit found that the department's internal control over one program did not ensure compliance with federal laws regarding activities allowed or unallowed, allowable costs/cost principles, period of availability and procurement and suspension and debarment. It disclosed material weaknesses in internal controls. The audit totaled up known questioned costs and pegged that at $780,908, and known and likely questioned costs at more than $3.1 million.

For example, the department's internal control did not stop the department from incurring expenses totaling more than $622,000 and requesting reimbursements in excess of the maximum funding limitations. It also did not make sure costs were charged to the correct federal program, nor did it ensure that vendors were not on the federal excluded parties list system.

The audit recommended the department strengthen its internal control over the O&M projects program.

When reviewing the internal control over the National Guard Civilian Youth Opportunities Program, the audit found it also did not ensure compliance with federal laws.

It identified known questioned costs of $14,016 and known and likely questioned costs of more than $1 million.

It also found that 17 of the 19 time sheets of staff members it reviewed signed and submitted their sheets prior to the last day they worked in the pay period. It also found the department did not request reimbursement of available funds related to the ChalleNGe Program.

Group Says It Will Start Effort To Legalize Marijuana

An Ann Arbor-based organization has said it will start an effort to put a marijuana legalization effort on the ballot in 2012.

The group Repeal Today for a Safer Michigan said it will attempt to put a constitutional amendment on the ballot to make possession and use of marijuana legal for persons 21 and older.

Officials with the group said they will begin efforts to collect signatures starting in mid-January.

While voters approved the use of medical marijuana in 2008, recent court rulings and legislation have sharply limited its availability in the state.

Fed Says Midwest Economy Growing, Though Manufacturing Down

Economic growth improved in the Midwest in November, though the manufacturing sector was down slightly during the month, the Federal Reserve Bank of Chicago said in two separate reports.

The overall economy for Michigan, Indiana, Illinois, Wisconsin and Iowa grew at a faster pace in November than it did in October, the Fed report said. However, the pace of growth for the month was still behind the historic average for the region.

However, the region grew at a faster rate than did the entire U.S. economy during November, the report said.

In Michigan, the economy grew by 1.5 percent during the month. Only Illinois at 1.4 percent saw a slightly slower growth. In Indiana the growth was 1.8 percent, in Wisconsin 2.1 percent and in Iowa at 2.4 percent.

However, the Chicago Fed's Midwest Manufacturing Index showed overall activity dropped in November compared to October.

Automotive and steel production both increased during the month, the index said, but machinery and resource production fell.

However, even after falling, the report said Midwest manufacturing still ran ahead of national manufacturing.

Officials Praise Michigan Chronicle Publisher Sam Logan

State and local officials called Michigan Chronicle Publisher Sam Logan a fair and courageous man who transcended both politics and race. Mr. Logan, 78, died Wednesday at his Detroit home.

Mr. Logan served twice as publisher of the weekly newspaper that serves mainly the black community in Detroit and the state. He succeeded Longworth Quinn as publisher in the 1980s - after having worked for the paper since the early 1960s - and then, after leaving in 2000 over editorial differences, taking over again in 2003.

As publisher, Mr. Logan startled many by endorsing former Governor John Engler for re-election in 1994 over Democrat Howard Wolpe, and by later endorsing Republican L. Brooks Patterson for re-election as Oakland County Executive over Democrat Brenda Lawrence.

Governor Rick Snyder called Mr. Logan a pioneer in journalism and a "courageous advocate for the African-American community" whose work transcended both race and politics.

Attorney General Bill Schuette said Mr. Logan's influence was as "large as the city he championed."

Oakland County Sheriff and former Sen. Mike Bouchard said on his Twitter feed that Mr. Logan always played fair with him.

Mr. Logan was born in Louisiana and moved to Detroit as a teenager with his family. After graduating high school and service in the U.S. Army, he worked in Detroit radio before joining the Chronicle in 1961. He graduated from the University of Detroit in the 1970s.

Volume #51, Report #20 -- Tuesday, January 31, 2012

House G.O.P. Has Money Edge; Some Key Incumbents Lagging

The House Republican caucus has a sizeable money advantage over House Democrats as it begins this election year, caucus campaign reports filed Tuesday show.

House Republicans have $608,000 cash on hand, compared to the $375,767 the Democrats have in the bank.

Neither caucus has any debt on its books.

"House Republicans have been forging a new path in Lansing to help Michigan redefine what makes us great by putting taxpayers first," { HYPERLINK "http://www.gongwer.com/index.cfm?link=bio.cfm&nameid=203801&locid=1" } (R-Shelby Township), the HRCC chair said in a statement. "We have reduced government spending, put the state's fiscal house in order and moved ahead swiftly with reforms that make Michigan a better place to provide a job."

The G.O.P. also outshone their counterparts when it came to fundraising. From October 21 to the end of the year, the caucus raised $157,857 from 104 donors.

(top) and { HYPERLINK "http://www.gongwer.com/index.cfm?link=bio.cfm&nameid=267701&locid=1" }.

Democrats, who filed their report after the Department of State's deadline, received more donations, but in far smaller amounts. The caucus raised $97,127 from 783 different contributors in the period and spent $69,240.

The biggest donors to the House GOP caucus was the Michigan Republican Party, Joshua Katke, a physician from St. Charles, and David Van Andel, CEO of the Van Andel Institute. They each gave the maximum $20,000 donation.

During that time period it spent $77,783, with much of that going toward the failed defense of former Rep. Paul Scott (R-Grand Blanc) who lost his seat in a recall election last November.

The largest contribution to the Democratic caucus came from the House { HYPERLINK "http://www.gongwer.com/index.cfm?link=bio.cfm&nameid=230301&locid=1" }'s political action committee, which contributed $12,500. The Justice PAC contributed $9,000.

"People from across Michigan are fed up with the way out-of-touch Republicans have run our state since they took over all branches of state government last year," { HYPERLINK "http://www.gongwer.com/index.cfm?link=bio.cfm&nameid=224601&locid=1" } (D-Flint), fundraising chair for the House Democratic Caucus said in a statement. "This increase in contributions to House Democrats shows that Democrats have clear momentum heading into the 2012 elections."

The House Republican caucus has raised more than $1 million in 2011. In 2009, it raised $546,179 and had $450,000 in debt.

HOUSE INCUMBENTS: Annual reports were also due Tuesday for the various campaigns of House members seeking re-election in competitive seats.

{ HYPERLINK "http://www.gongwer.com/index.cfm?link=bio.cfm&nameid=273801&locid=1" } (R-Scio Township) is in the best cash position of all seats expected to be contested in the general election or a primary, after reporting he has $111,630 cash on hand. He raised $125,411 last year, though about half of that came from a loan he made to himself. He spent $43,824. Democrats are expected to fight to reclaim the 52nd District that Mr. Ouimet picked off in 2010.

Behind Mr. Ouimet was { HYPERLINK "http://www.gongwer.com/index.cfm?link=bio.cfm&nameid=205201&locid=1" } (D-Grand Rapids) with $102,023 on hand. Last year, he raised $64,684 and spent $25,145. During the redistricting process he lost a piece of his base, making a shot at a third term much tougher in the 76th District.

The worst fundraising performance came from { HYPERLINK "http://www.gongwer.com/index.cfm?link=bio.cfm&nameid=259701&locid=1" } (D-Detroit), who reported having just $292 on hand. She raised $8,250 last year and spent $8,948.

Due to redistricting, she would be forced into a primary in the 2nd District with { HYPERLINK "http://www.gongwer.com/index.cfm?link=bio.cfm&nameid=159701&locid=1" } (D-Grosse Pointe). She could not be reached for comment late Tuesday.

Mr. Bledsoe has $12,896 cash on hand. Last year, he raised $17,215 and spent $8,692. He also has $19,500 in debt from his 2008 campaign.

{ HYPERLINK "http://www.gongwer.com/index.cfm?link=bio.cfm&nameid=283301&locid=1" } (R-Austin), who has been plagued by a number of controversies in his first term and will face a primary in August in the 84th District, also had a poor showing.

He reported having just $554 cash on hand. During the year he raised $11,950, of which almost $4,000 was a loan to himself, and he spent $12,911.

He said he plans to run for re-election, but has been focused on his legislative work thus far rather than seeking campaign donations.

Another poor fundraising effort came from { HYPERLINK "http://www.gongwer.com/index.cfm?link=bio.cfm&nameid=275701&locid=1" } (R-York Township), whose 55th District seat was made heavily Democratic to the point he is toying with the idea of changing his party affiliation. He reported having $3,828 in cash on hand. During the year he raised $14,944 and spent $11,656. He also has more than $94,000 in debt from the 2010 campaign.

3rd: In this three-way primary race in Detroit, between { HYPERLINK "http://www.gongwer.com/index.cfm?link=bio.cfm&nameid=259001&locid=1" } (D-Detroit), { HYPERLINK "http://www.gongwer.com/index.cfm?link=bio.cfm&nameid=213101&locid=1" } (D-Detroit) and { HYPERLINK "http://www.gongwer.com/index.cfm?link=bio.cfm&nameid=228901&locid=1" } (D-Detroit), Ms. Howze appears to have a small advantage,

She has $16,582 cash on hand. She raised $25,446 last year and spent $9,167. Mr. Womack has $12,688 cash on hand. He raised $10,193 last year and spent $3,731. Mr. Olumba's report was not available as of press time.

6th: { HYPERLINK "http://www.gongwer.com/index.cfm?link=bio.cfm&nameid=217601&locid=1" } (D-Detroit) has a big cash advantage right now over { HYPERLINK "http://www.gongwer.com/index.cfm?link=bio.cfm&nameid=154001&locid=1" } (D-Detroit). They were drawn into the same district last year in the redistricting process. Ms. Tlaib has $71,538 cash on hand. She raised $80,735 last year and spent $25,679. Ms. Stapleton has $12,750 cash on hand. She raised $27,890 last year and spent $14,797. She also has $15,393 in debt from her 2010 campaign.

21st: { HYPERLINK "http://www.gongwer.com/index.cfm?link=bio.cfm&nameid=217801&locid=1" } (D-Canton Township) has $29,302 cash on hand. She raised $21,890 and spent $5,648. Republicans have long coveted this seat although Ms. Slavens survived the 2010 Democratic bloodbath.

23rd: { HYPERLINK "http://www.gongwer.com/index.cfm?link=bio.cfm&nameid=294301&locid=1" } (R-New Boston) who will likely face one of the toughest re-election fights, reported raising $45,525 and spent $10,712 last year. He has $34,814 cash on hand.

24th: { HYPERLINK "http://www.gongwer.com/index.cfm?link=bio.cfm&nameid=266801&locid=1" } (R-Harrison Township) has $13,523 cash on hand. He raised $24,534 last year and spent $13,851. Mr. Forlini won a previously Democratic seat, but Republicans made his seat much more GOP friendly in redistricting.

26th: { HYPERLINK "http://www.gongwer.com/index.cfm?link=bio.cfm&nameid=267701&locid=1" } (D-Royal Oak) reported numbers that had Democrats buzzing with $77,756 cash on hand after raising $96,242 last year and spending $33,826. Republicans have eyed this seat for years, but have never been able to break through, and Mr. Townsend appears to be taking all steps to keep the seat secure.

28th: { HYPERLINK "http://www.gongwer.com/index.cfm?link=bio.cfm&nameid=209201&locid=1" } (D-Warren), who was forced into a primary with { HYPERLINK "http://www.gongwer.com/index.cfm?link=bio.cfm&nameid=211501&locid=1" } (D-Warren), has the fundraising advantage so far.

Ms. Liss reported raising $40,405 last year and spent $12,329. She has $40,923 cash on hand. Mr. Switalski raised $23,356 and spent $12,916. He has $10,594 cash on hand.

32nd: { HYPERLINK "http://www.gongwer.com/index.cfm?link=bio.cfm&nameid=269201&locid=1" } (R-Richmond) has moved into the open 32nd House District and has $31,278 on hand. She raised $43,455 last year and spent $13,226. She also has $20,600 in debt, which includes a $20,000 loan she made to herself last month. It's not yet clear whether Democrats will try to recapture the seat.

40th: { HYPERLINK "http://www.gongwer.com/index.cfm?link=bio.cfm&nameid=171401&locid=1" } (D-West Bloomfield Township), who was drawn into a heavily Republican district, raised $57,730 last year and spent $20,863. She has $56,702 on hand. She also has $27,945 in debt, including a $25,000 loan she made to herself last month. Mr. Brown's plans for the ballot this year are not yet known. She has indicated she has no interest in moving so she can run in the 39th, which holds most of her existing district, and some Democrats are encouraging her to run for county office instead of what is probably a no-win re-election try.

57th: { HYPERLINK "http://www.gongwer.com/index.cfm?link=bio.cfm&nameid=276301&locid=1" } (R-Clayton) has $14,374 on hand. Last year, she raised $18,460 during the year and spent $16,227. Democrats are eager to retake this seat, and former Sen. Jim Berryman is running.

64th: { HYPERLINK "http://www.gongwer.com/index.cfm?link=bio.cfm&nameid=277401&locid=1" } (R-Jackson) raised $48,787 last year and spent $10,173. He has $41,358 cash on hand. He has $29,909 in debt, mostly from his 2010 campaign. This would be a tough seat for Democrats to regain, but its past means it could be in play.

65th: { HYPERLINK "http://www.gongwer.com/index.cfm?link=bio.cfm&nameid=277701&locid=1" } (R-Clarklake) has $84,443 cash on hand. Last year, he raised $75,175 and spent $58,257. He has $11,179 in debt from his 2010 campaign. Like the 64th, this also is an uphill fight for Democrats, but it was in Democratic hands from 2007-10.

70th: { HYPERLINK "http://www.gongwer.com/index.cfm?link=bio.cfm&nameid=204701&locid=1" } (R-Six Lakes) has $6,715 cash on hand. Last year he raised $19,714 and spent $15,352. He has $17,399 in debt from the 2010 campaign. Former Rep. Mike Huckleberry is planning a rematch, and it will be a bit of a longshot in this Republican-leaning seat, but Mr. Outman's fundraising so far might give Democrats reason to at least think about it.

91st: { HYPERLINK "http://www.gongwer.com/index.cfm?link=bio.cfm&nameid=219601&locid=1" } (R-White River Township) has $53,641 cash on hand as she prepare for a likely vigorous Democratic challenge. Last year she raised $60,257 and spent $12,510. She has $251,639 in debt from her 2008 and 2010 contests.

97th: { HYPERLINK "http://www.gongwer.com/index.cfm?link=bio.cfm&nameid=288101&locid=1" } (R-Clare) raised $49,279 last year and spent $20,562. He has $33,696 cash on hand. This seat has Democratic tendencies although Republicans made it more GOP in redistricting.

99th: { HYPERLINK "http://www.gongwer.com/index.cfm?link=bio.cfm&nameid=288901&locid=1" } (R-Mount Pleasant) raised $42,650 last year and spent $21,612. He has $24,278 cash on hand. Democrats have pined about winning the Isabella County-based seat, but have never broken through.

103rd: { HYPERLINK "http://www.gongwer.com/index.cfm?link=bio.cfm&nameid=86701&locid=1" } (R-Lake City) raised $19,151 last year and spent $5,813. He has $13,572 cash on hand. This seat became fairly solidly Republican in redistricting and is probably out of reach for Democrats now.

106th: { HYPERLINK "http://www.gongwer.com/index.cfm?link=bio.cfm&nameid=228001&locid=1" } (R-Presque Isle) has $30,500 on hand. He raised $38,848 last year and spent $28,538. There's a strong Democratic base in the Alpena portion of the seat that will likely mean Mr. Pettalia faces a challenge.

108th: { HYPERLINK "http://www.gongwer.com/index.cfm?link=bio.cfm&nameid=292001&locid=1" } (R-Vulcan) raised $17,314 and spent $5,966 during the year. He has $12,222 cash on hand. He has $18,000 in debt from the 2010 campaign. Democrats rue losing this seat, and Mr. McBroom's lackluster fundraising so far will likely have them encouraged.

110th: { HYPERLINK "http://www.gongwer.com/index.cfm?link=bio.cfm&nameid=292401&locid=1" } (R-Atlantic Mine) has $17,222 cash on hand. He raised $19,523 last year and spent $5,443. Like the 108th, this is one the Democrats want back, and Mr. Huuki's fundraising is not exactly intimidating.

Peters Continues Big Fundraising Haul; Anderson Off To Decent Start

{ HYPERLINK "http://www.gongwer.com/index.cfm?link=bio.cfm&nameid=7801&locid=1" } of Bloomfield Township is on his way to an overwhelming money advantage over { HYPERLINK "http://www.gongwer.com/index.cfm?link=bio.cfm&nameid=12001&locid=1" } of Detroit and other competitors for the Democratic nomination in the 14th U.S. House District, according to campaign finance reports filed Tuesday.

Mr. Peters raised $1.17 million so far for the election cycle, including $283,237 for the quarter. After spending $69,552 for the quarter, Mr. Peters had $1.05 million cash on hand.

Mr. Clarke raised $123,794 for the quarter and spent $42,587, leaving him with $500,213 on hand as Mr. Peters continues to extend his cash advantage.

Southfield Mayor Brenda Lawrence, who will officially announce her campaign and open her first campaign office Wednesday, had not yet filed a report.

{ HYPERLINK "http://www.gongwer.com/members/GaryPeters.jpg" }{ HYPERLINK

"http://www.gongwer.com/index.cfm?link=bio.cfm&nameid=7801&locid=1" } has a big money advantage in the 14th District.

In the other closely watched primary in a Detroit-based seat, U.S. Rep. John Conyers (D-Detroit) has the lead in cash on hand, but { HYPERLINK "http://www.gongwer.com/index.cfm?link=bio.cfm&nameid=39501&locid=1" } (D-Westland) is off to a good start.

Mr. Conyers raised $156,489 for the quarter and spent $79,088, leaving him with $151,455 on hand. Mr. Anderson raised $64,413, but spent just $7,940 and had $56,474 on hand.

{ HYPERLINK "http://www.gongwer.com/index.cfm?link=bio.cfm&nameid=161801&locid=1" } (D-Highland Park) posted low numbers, raising just $9,220, spending $3,420 and reporting $5,800 on hand.

{ HYPERLINK "http://www.gongwer.com/index.cfm?link=bio.cfm&nameid=89401&locid=1" } (D-Detroit) has not filed a statement of organization to begin raising funds to run for Congress, but she said Tuesday her campaign is reaching out to voters in western Wayne County, where she is lesser known.

Ms. Jackson said she would be filing a campaign finance disclosure for the next reporting quarter in March.

5th: Former Genesee County Treasurer Dan Kildee, who is looking to succeed his uncle, retiring { HYPERLINK "http://www.gongwer.com/index.cfm?link=bio.cfm&nameid=1901&locid=1" } (D-Flint), has raised $210,403 so far for the election, including $78,223 during the last quarter. Of that, he had $49,716 left in cash on hand, his report showed.

So far, no opponents have officially lined up to challenge Mr. Kildee for the Democratic nomination, though several names have circulated as possibilities.

1st: In the 1st U.S. House District, where the battle will be in the general election, U.S. Rep. Dan Benishek (R-Crystal Falls) raised $667,663 for the cycle, including $202,773 for the quarter. Mr. Benishek had $277,056 cash on hand, but also still had $93,000 in outstanding debt.

Former Rep. Gary McDowell, in his second attempt at the seat, raised $338,639 for the cycle including $181,509 for the quarter. But he still had most of those funds, $303,078, cash on hand.

6th: Former Rep. Jack Hoogendyk, who is challenging { HYPERLINK "http://www.gongwer.com/index.cfm?link=bio.cfm&nameid=2401&locid=1" } (R-St. Joseph), announced only recently, but is still starting his race at a tremendous disadvantage. His report showed his sole source of funds so far was a $100 loan to his committee and he had $15.15 cash on hand.

Mr. Upton, in contrast, raised $1.49 million for the cycle, including $280,305 during the last quarter. After expenses, Mr. Upton had $1.71 million cash on hand.

3rd: { HYPERLINK "http://www.gongwer.com/index.cfm?link=bio.cfm&nameid=204901&locid=1" } (R-Kentwood), who does not have a primary opponent and is not expected to face a substantial challenge in the general election, raised $134,242 for the quarter and spent $41,808, giving him $162,900 cash on hand. Democrats would probably love to challenge Mr. Amash because of his voting record and his seat becoming slightly more Democratic, but as of yet, no viable candidate has emerged.

11th: The decision of { HYPERLINK "http://www.gongwer.com/index.cfm?link=bio.cfm&nameid=18801&locid=1" } (R-White Lake Township) to abandon a challenge to { HYPERLINK "http://www.gongwer.com/index.cfm?link=bio.cfm&nameid=4001&locid=1" } (R-Livonia) in the Republican primary was a surprise, but his campaign finance report showed he was struggling to raise money.

Mr. McCotter raised $105,800 over the quarter, spent $83,351 and reported cash on hand of $142,528. Meanwhile, Mr. Kowall, who announced his bid before the start of the quarter, raised just $22,648, spent $13,739 and had just $8,909 remaining. Beating Mr. McCotter would have required significant resources in the expensive Detroit media market, and those did not appear to be materializing for Mr. Kowall when he ended his campaign January 18, citing a need to focus on work in the Senate.

Bill Package Targeting Public Union Dues, Strikes Heads To Floor

Union members packed the House Oversight and Reform Committee on Tuesday, as the Republicans on the panel reported a package of bills that would impose fines on striking public employees and require written consent of an employee to have his or her employer deduct union dues from wages.

Since the package was introduced in September, union leaders have testified in opposition, saying the bills ({ HYPERLINK "http://www.gongwer.com/index.cfm?link=legislation_billdetail.cfm&billid=2011HB502301" } , { HYPERLINK "http://www.gongwer.com/index.cfm?link=legislation_billdetail.cfm&billid=2011HB502401" } , { HYPERLINK "http://www.gongwer.com/index.cfm?link=legislation_billdetail.cfm&billid=2011HB502501" } and { HYPERLINK "http://www.gongwer.com/index.cfm?link=legislation_billdetail.cfm&billid=2011HB502601" }) are unnecessary and would cause an undue burden on unions and businesses.

{ HYPERLINK "http://www.gongwer.com/index.cfm?link=bio.cfm&nameid=191501&locid=1" } (R-Rochester Hills), committee chair, moved quickly through the remaining five union advocates who wanted to testify. He had planned to not allow committee members to ask questions of the witnesses, but { HYPERLINK "http://www.gongwer.com/index.cfm?link=bio.cfm&nameid=159701&locid=1" } (D-Grosse Pointe) objected loudly.

"I demand an opportunity to ask a question of this witness," Mr. Bledsoe said.

Mr. McMillin said the committee has had numerous meetings in the past few weeks on the bills and numerous questions had been asked.

"I should have just wrapped it up last week," Mr. McMillin said.

Mr. McMillin relented and Mr. Bledsoe was allowed to ask a brief question to Tim Hughes of the United Auto Workers, and it was the only question asked.

Mr. Hughes was testifying in opposition to HB 5025 and said it preempts federal law, which regulates dues check-off rather than the states.

"I don't know why the state would need to insert itself in this process to begin with," he said.

HB 5025 would require written consent of an employee to have his or her employer deduct union dues from wages and at recent hearings has drawn the most fire from union leaders.

"We're allowing union workers to hold union management accountable for how they are spending their hard-earned dollars," Mr. McMillin said in a statement. "Union leadership will work that much harder for their membership if they realize that workers have an ongoing choice in paying dues."

HB 5023, sponsored by { HYPERLINK "http://www.gongwer.com/index.cfm?link=bio.cfm&nameid=284201&locid=1" } (R-Alto), would impose a fine on public employees equal to a day's pay for each day the employee illegally strikes. The bargaining representative of the public employee would be fined $5,000 per day for each day the employee strikes.

HB 5024 would modify laws regarding picketing so that the event could not obstruct the entrance to a place of employment or roadways. It would also prohibit the picketing of a private residence by any means. The business or person being picketed could seek an injunction from their local circuit court.

The fourth bill, HB 5026, would eliminate language that an employer in a labor dispute has to state in an advertisement seeking employment that the jobs sought are to replace those workers involved in the dispute.

All four bills were reported on 4-2 party-line votes.

Proponents of the legislation said in prior testimony that the penalties created in the bills are for actions taken that are already illegal and if union members or others don't break the law, the bills will have no impact.

"This is just another effort by politicians to dismantle collective bargaining one piece at a time," Michigan AFL-CIO President Karla Swift said in a statement. "These bills won't create jobs, but they will give big corporations more power to silence the voices of Michigan workers. Our Legislature should be focused on putting people back to work instead of attacking workers and our teachers, nurses and firefighters."

Ray Holman of United Auto Workers Local 6000, the largest state employee union, said the bills are unnecessary, and is more about Republicans wanting to limit how much unions can contribute to political causes.

"This is a power grab," Mr. Holman said.

The bills now head to the House floor.

Some G.O.P. Skepticism On Bill Forcing Local Revenue Requests To Even-Year Nov. Ballots

Taxing units in the state could only place a request for new revenue on a November ballot of an even-numbered year under a bill being considered by the House Redistricting and Elections Committee.

The panel took testimony only on { HYPERLINK "http://www.gongwer.com/index.cfm?link=legislation_billdetail.cfm&billid=2011HB521901" } , sponsored by { HYPERLINK "http://www.gongwer.com/index.cfm?link=bio.cfm&nameid=80001&locid=1" } (R-Troy), who said the goal is to increase voter turnout, and eliminate stealth elections.

The bill does not affect renewals, only requests for additional revenue.

{ HYPERLINK "http://www.gongwer.com/index.cfm?link=bio.cfm&nameid=281601&locid=1" } (R-Stevensville) had a concern about bond issues in local communities.

"If we have to wait two years and interest rates go up, I don't know if we've saved taxpayers money by making them vote on a bond issue at a higher rate," he said.

{ HYPERLINK "http://www.gongwer.com/index.cfm?link=bio.cfm&nameid=203801&locid=1" } (R-Shelby Township), committee chair, said it's also possible that interest rates could go down.

"I just had a kind of uncomfortable moment, I was agreeing with Rep. Pscholka," said { HYPERLINK "http://www.gongwer.com/index.cfm?link=bio.cfm&nameid=224601&locid=1" } (D-Flint).

Mr. Stanley said he had the same concern as Mr. Pscholka did and asked about balancing the benefits with the timing factor.

Mr. Knollenberg said communities should be looking ahead like is done in Oakland County where there is a three-year rolling budget with a five-year revenue projection.

Another concern about timing came from { HYPERLINK "http://www.gongwer.com/index.cfm?link=bio.cfm&nameid=292001&locid=1" } (R-Vulcan), who wondered what would happen if a school burned down and the district had to wait more than a year before it could put a proposal on the ballot for new revenue to rebuild it.

In his experience, insurance would not cover all the expenses necessary to reopen, he said.

Snyder Raises Much Less Than Granholm Did In First Year As Gov.

Mr. Snyder's haul of $346,300 fell well below Ms. Granholm's $935,793 although Mr. Snyder has refused to take money from political action committees, crimping his ability to raise funds. However, Mr. Snyder raised $314,950 of his overall take for the year at four fundraisers in October and November, meaning he raised almost no money during the first nine months he was in office.

Additionally, Mr. Snyder began to repay himself for the $6 million he loaned his gubernatorial campaign in 2010.

Mr. Snyder's report for fundraising and spending activity in 2011 showed $825,000 worth of payments he made from his campaign committee, Rick Snyder for Michigan, to himself. That reduced the amount he showed as debts held by his committee to $5.12 million.

Politicians repaying themselves for loans they made to their campaigns is common. In Mr. Snyder's case, it is more notable simply because of how much of his own money he put into his campaign.

Snyder spokesperson Sara Wurfel said Mr. Snyder repaid himself in March from funds he had raised during the gubernatorial campaign and has no plans to make any more repayments from his campaign committee to himself.

"Any of the money that was new beyond that period was not used for any debt retirement and is not planned for that purpose," she said.

Overall, Mr. Snyder still intends to stick to his 10-year plan of running for office in 2009 and 2010 and then serving as governor from 2011-2019, provided that voters re-elect him in 2014, Ms. Wurfel said. She attributed his fundraising total to being focused on his agenda.

"He was pretty singularly focused on the economy and getting Michigan back on a path that was sustainable. He wasn't really focused on fundraising," she said.

For the year, Mr. Snyder spent $1.4 million (that includes the $825,000 Mr. Snyder paid to himself). That reduced his cash on hand to $534,236. That's about the same as what Ms. Granholm reported having on hand at the end of 2003 - $563,587.

{ HYPERLINK "http://www.gongwer.com/index.cfm?link=bio.cfm&nameid=77201&locid=1" } reported raising $225,435 for the period, which ran from November 23, 2010, through December 31, 2011. He had $187,487 on hand. Among Mr. Schuette's expenditures was $16,704 on legal fees to ward off a recall campaign against him.

And { HYPERLINK "http://www.gongwer.com/index.cfm?link=bio.cfm&nameid=52301&locid=1" } reported raising $118,310 with $90,052 on hand.

Senate Dems Have More Cash On Hand As G.O.P. Pays Back Loan

Senate Republicans significantly outraised their Democratic counterparts, quarterly financial reports submitted Tuesday with the state show, but the GOP trails in cash on hand.

The Senate Republican Campaign Committee raised $93,193 between late October and the end of December, but spent $94,422.

In comparison, the Michigan Senate Democratic Fund raised just $13,345 and spent $19,763 over the period.

More than $60,000 of the Republican spending went to pay down the $550,000 loan the caucus took out in the 2010 election cycle. The Senate is not up for re-election until 2014.

{ HYPERLINK "http://www.gongwer.com/members/hildenbrandnew.jpg" }{ HYPERLINK "http://www.gongwer.com/index.cfm?link=bio.cfm&nameid=107701&locid=1" } had a strong fundraising haul.

The caucus reported a $154,000 balance on that loan. They also reported $48,877 in cash on hand.

Meanwhile, Democrats have no debt and $152,076 in the bank.

Both caucuses raised money over a small pool of donors.

Donations of more than $10,000 came to Republicans from political action committees affiliated with Meijer, the Michigan Restaurant Association, Brooke Holdings, the Michigan Association of Insurance Agents, the Auto Dealers, Chiropractors PAC and the Michigan Association of Certified Public Accountants. In all, Republicans received 48 donations.

Democrats raised money from 95 donors, only one of which wrote a check at $10,000 or more - the Michigan Beer and Wine Wholesalers Association. The Michigan Laborers' Political League came in with the second highest donation of $7,500.

Leadership political action committees for members were not required to file a statement on Tuesday.

But campaign committees had to file their annual reports, which covered the period just after the November 2010 election through the end of last year. Below is a breakdown of what some of the members representing competitive districts reported.

- { HYPERLINK "http://www.gongwer.com/index.cfm?link=bio.cfm&nameid=74701&locid=1" } (R-Escanaba): Raised $47,694 with cash on hand of $40,374. Expenditures totaled $38.976.

- { HYPERLINK "http://www.gongwer.com/index.cfm?link=bio.cfm&nameid=25101&locid=1" } (R-Mayville): Raised $53,960 with cash on hand of $32,288. Expenditures totaled $36,370.

- { HYPERLINK "http://www.gongwer.com/index.cfm?link=bio.cfm&nameid=101501&locid=1" } (R-Hart): Raised $46,039 with cash on hand of $74,820. Expenditures totaled $32,734.

- { HYPERLINK "http://www.gongwer.com/index.cfm?link=bio.cfm&nameid=107701&locid=1" } (R-Lowell): Raised $78,336 with cash on hand of $82,634. Expenditures totaled $22,534.

- { HYPERLINK "http://www.gongwer.com/index.cfm?link=bio.cfm&nameid=57701&locid=1" } (R-Battle Creek): Raised $58,150 with cash on hand of $69,102. Expenditures totaled $44,222.

- { HYPERLINK "http://www.gongwer.com/index.cfm?link=bio.cfm&nameid=54001&locid=1" } (R-Grand Blanc): Raised $41,098 with cash on hand of $26,347. Expenditures totaled $34,787.

- { HYPERLINK "http://www.gongwer.com/index.cfm?link=bio.cfm&nameid=79201&locid=1" } (R-Sterling Heights): Raised $33,950 with cash on hand of $53,609. Expenditures totaled $4,403.

- A report for { HYPERLINK "http://www.gongwer.com/index.cfm?link=bio.cfm&nameid=251401&locid=1" } (R-Canton Township) was unavailable on the Department of State's website.

Study Charges Low Income Will Pay More Than Wealthy Under Tax Plan

The changes enacted last year to Michigan's business and income taxes will affect lower-income persons far more than upper-income individuals by a factor of 1,000 times, a study being released by the Michigan League for Human Services says, and 51 percent of all taxpayers will pay more income taxes.

The paper says the loss and reduction of several major tax credits, especially a reduction in the Earned Income Tax Credit, means the lowest paid workers will pay an effective average of 1 percent more in income taxes. But the wealthiest people will pay just an average of 0.001 percent more. On a percentage basis, that is a difference of 1,000 times, league officials said.

The study, conducted by the Washington-based Institute for Taxation and Economic Policy, will be released by the Michigan League on Wednesday.

League President Gilda Jacobs said the study shows that the massive tax changes enacted last year by { HYPERLINK "http://www.gongwer.com/index.cfm?link=bio.cfm&nameid=245801&locid=1" } and the Legislature show that "winners and losers" were picked. Working class families and retirees will pay more in taxes to offset the tax cuts that businesses received, Ms. Jacobs said.

Mr. Snyder proposed and the Legislature enacted an end to the Michigan Business Tax, replacing it with a corporate income tax at 6 percent. To help recoup some of the lost revenue, the Legislature eliminated virtually all income and business tax credits.

As a political compromise, the Earned Income Tax Credit was kept but drastically reduced.

The report challenged some of the assumptions used in adopting the tax shift. For example, one argument Mr. Snyder and supporters of the change made was that it would end double taxation on income on small, non-incorporated businesses (in those companies, the business income is paid to the owners, but under the MBT was taxed first as business income and then as personal income).

But the report argued that ignored the fact that businesses do use services, such as police and fire protection, and should pay for those services. Also, the report said by eliminating tax credits, such as the credit individuals received for paying city income tax, effectively now means they are paying double taxes when companies have been relieved of that.

The loss of credits, including credits for charitable deductions and children, as well as subjecting retirees to the income tax now when they were largely exempt before, is the primary reason that at least 51 percent of Michigan residents would pay more in the income tax, the report said.

Dramatically affecting the lowest income individuals and families, those with incomes of $17,000 a year or less, is the sharp reduction in the EITC and the loss of the child credit, the report said.

That group of taxpayers will pay an average of $101 more, or a full 1 percent, more in taxes, the report said.

The percentage increase declines as incomes go up. In most cases, the amount they actually pay will go up as well. Those earning between $151,000 and $334,000 a year, will pay $636 more on average, but that would equate to a 0.3 percent increase.

However, those earning $334,000 a year or more will only see an average dollar increase of $7 a year, because the loss of credits will hardly affect them. That equates to an increase of 0.001 percent.

Because the EITC remains and was not eliminated, there is still a chance the Legislature will increase its benefit with time, the report said.

A spokesperson for Mr. Snyder could not be reached for comment.

Report Outlines Plans To Separate Mississippi, Great Lakes

A report released Tuesday puts some numbers on the cost of separating the Great Lakes and Mississippi River basins, but members of the Michigan congressional delegation are still expecting to have to push the U.S. Army Corps of Engineers to turn that report into a work plan.

The Great Lakes Commission and the Great Lakes and St. Lawrence Cities Initiative released a joint report Tuesday, { HYPERLINK "http://www.glc.org/caws/" \t "blank" }, that outlines three different options, with costs ranging from $3.3 billion to $9.5 billion and durations from 10 years to 17 years, for ensuring that Asian carp and other aquatic invasive species could not make their way between the two water basins, but the water traffic and water quality processes that created need for the canals in the first place could continue.

{ HYPERLINK "http://www.gongwer.com/index.cfm?link=bio.cfm&nameid=150701&locid=1" } (D-Lansing) said in a conference call with reporters Tuesday that the report shows the Corps was wrong in its original timetables for acting on the issue.

She and { HYPERLINK "http://www.gongwer.com/index.cfm?link=bio.cfm&nameid=1401&locid=1" } (R-Midland), who have sponsored legislation in their respective chambers to order the Corps to move faster on the report that it currently projects will not be completed until 2015, said the report will give their efforts a boost.

"This study is very helpful because it shows we don't have to wait years and years to have a plan, a timeline to make saving the Great Lakes a reality," Mr. Camp said.

And he said the report shows a cost benefit to the barriers, considering the projected cost of damage to Great Lakes fisheries should the Asian carp be allowed a foothold in the lakes.

"Prior to having this study, we had heard all kinds of numbers (on the cost of separating the basins)," Ms. Stabenow said. "It's within a range that's achievable, it's doable and that's going to give us some real momentum."

But Congress will still have to pass legislation to order the Corps to speed up its process, she said.

{ HYPERLINK "http://www.gongwer.com/index.cfm?link=bio.cfm&nameid=77201&locid=1" }, who has been continuing the state's actions in federal court to get the Corps to move faster on a plan to keep the carp out of the Great Lakes, also praised the report.

"Asian carp are knocking at the front door of the Great Lakes, so we simply do not have until 2015 to complete a study. We need to get started separating these two bodies of water as soon as possible," Mr. Schuette said. "The Great Lakes Commission accomplished in months what the Army Corps hasn't been able to do in years. With thousands of jobs and a spectacular ecological resource at stake, we can no longer afford to wait for the federal government."

Gary O'Keefe, program manager for the Great Lakes Mississippi River Inter-basin Study for the Corps, said officials were still studying the report and would likely know in a few weeks how it would fit into the study the Corps is already developing.

The groups came up with three proposals, but are recommending use of what they call the Mid-System Alternative, which would place four barriers along the current canal system to prevent passage from Lake Michigan to the Mississippi River. Among other advantages, the proposal would put water flow most closely back to what it was before the canal systems were built.

And it would be the least costly at a projected maximum $4.3 billion over up to 17 years of construction.

Leaders of the groups acknowledged the plans came with a substantial price tag, but they said doing nothing could cost more. And there could be side benefits of the projects.

David Ullrich, executive director of the Cities Initiatives, said the study showed separating the basins is not only possible, but brings benefit.

"There were many who said you've got to be crazy to even think about this," Mr. Ullrich said. "If 110 years ago they could be so bold as to reverse the flow, seems to me we ought to be able to take a serious look at a project like this."

He and Tim Eder, executive director of the Great Lakes Commission, also noted that some of the water transportation facilities in the Chicago area have languished in recent years.

"There are really going to be some opportunities for benefiting the Chicago region with this plan," Mr. Eder said. "So we think a federal investment is appropriate to consider."

In particular, Mr. Eder said the Mid-System Alternative would create an opportunity for a multi-modal shipping hub in the city.

The plan would still allow shipping to move into the city from both the Mississippi and Lake Michigan, and would allow most of the flood and treated sewage water to flow into the Mississippi. Mr. Eder said only one of the water treatment plants would have to be upgraded to meet Lake Michigan water standards.

And preserving those water and transportation systems was among the mandates from the groups' boards in developing the plans.

"We could unite around coming together to find a long term solution," Mr. Eder said. "Our organizations also told us that we can't just do that by slamming the door in Chicago. We have to also come up with a barrier that also protects those uses in Chicago."

The Down River Alternative would be simpler from the separation side, requiring only one barrier on the Des Plaines River and essentially turning the flow back to Lake Michigan. But Mr. Eder said that would also mean some difficulties for container shipping into the city from the Mississippi River side and would require all of the city's water treatment plants to upgrade to Lake Michigan quality standards. That would push costs to some $9.5 billion.

The Near Lake Alternative would also come in at $9.5 billion. More water would flow back down the Mississippi because the barriers would be closer to Lake Michigan, but there would be five barriers and there would be little room for container ships to come into the canals from the lake.

Financial Review Team Ordered For Muskegon Heights Schools

A financial review team has been named to look into the finances of the Muskegon Heights School District, the Department of Treasury announced Tuesday, making it the third such team reviewing local finances of a potentially distressed system.

Also Tuesday, the state gave the financial review team investigating Inkster's finances an additional 30 days to complete its study of the city's fiscal situation.

And a Treasury spokesperson said the Detroit financial review team had held at least four meetings to go through the city's fiscal problems. Detroit City Council President Charles Pugh was quoted in The Detroit News as saying he was hearing a breakthrough was near on a deal for concessions with the city's employee unions.

The team was ordered for Muskegon Heights Schools after a preliminary review showed the district had probable financial distress. That includes a cumulative deficit of $8.5 million, which is 15 percent more than its current revenues. The review also indicates the district would probably be in a deficit until at least 2015 and owes the Michigan Public School Employee Retirement System at least $1.4 million.

Named to the committee were Carol Wolenberg, deputy superintendent in the Department of Education; Tom Saxton, deputy treasurer; Doug Ringler, director of the office of internal audit in the Department of Technology, Management and Budget; Dale Nesbary, president of Muskegon Community College; John VanWyck, retired public affairs officer for GTE/Verizon; Fredrick Headen, director of Treasury's local government services; David Martell, executive director of the Michigan School Business Officials Association; and Brom Stibitz, senior policy adviser in Treasury.

The committee has 60 days to complete its review.

In the meantime, the review committee looking into the finances at Inkster have been granted 30 additional days to finish their review, meaning they must report to { HYPERLINK "http://www.gongwer.com/index.cfm?link=bio.cfm&nameid=245801&locid=1" } by February 29, a Treasury spokesperson said.

And the Detroit review team has met at least four times to look over the city's finances. Mayor Dave Bing is still trying to reach agreement with the city's unions on concessions to help stave off the appointment of a manager. The state still hopes to see a resolution with the unions in early February.

Emergency managers are now overseeing operations in Flint, Pontiac, Ecorse and Benton Harbor, as well as Detroit Public Schools and most recently in Highland Park Schools.

Unpaid Parking Ticket Bill Headed To Governor

A measure lowering the threshold for the court to notify a person to appear because of unpaid parking tickets is headed to { HYPERLINK "http://www.gongwer.com/index.cfm?link=bio.cfm&nameid=245801&locid=1" } for his signature.

Under current law, that notification is triggered after six unpaid parking tickets, but { HYPERLINK "http://www.gongwer.com/index.cfm?link=legislation_billdetail.cfm&billid=2011SB13001" } lowers it to three. If a person fails to appear, the secretary of state is still prohibited from issuing or renewing a driver's license until those tickets are paid for and the court has received a $45 "clearance fee," according to the Senate Fiscal Agency.

The House added a sunset to the three-ticket threshold for January 2018 and the Senate concurred Tuesday in that change 27-11.

Three Republicans joined Democrats to oppose the bill: Senate { HYPERLINK "http://www.gongwer.com/index.cfm?link=bio.cfm&nameid=151101&locid=1" } (R-West Olive), { HYPERLINK "http://www.gongwer.com/index.cfm?link=bio.cfm&nameid=57701&locid=1" } (R-Battle Creek) and { HYPERLINK "http://www.gongwer.com/index.cfm?link=bio.cfm&nameid=79201&locid=1" } (R-Sterling Heights).

But four Democrats crossed lines and voted with Republicans to support it: { HYPERLINK "http://www.gongwer.com/index.cfm?link=bio.cfm&nameid=43601&locid=1" } (D-Warren), { HYPERLINK "http://www.gongwer.com/index.cfm?link=bio.cfm&nameid=53401&locid=1" }

{ HYPERLINK "http://www.gongwer.com/index.cfm?link=bio.cfm&nameid=107701&locid=1" } (R-Lowell), the bill sponsor, said, "There's been people abusing the unpaid parking system."

The statute of limitations on unpaid parking tickets is six years. Grand Rapids has written off $1.3 million in unpaid parking tickets in the past three years because of the statute of limitations, the fiscal agency noted.

Not only is it a local revenue issue, Mr. Hildenbrand said, but sometimes six tickets are too much for a person to pay. By triggering them to go to court earlier, the hope is the issue can be resolved before it becomes a larger problem.

"We all don't care for them, (but) it's the law of the land," he said. "If you get them, pay them."

The bill is a reintroduction from last year after the Senate didn't take up a measure sponsored by { HYPERLINK "http://www.gongwer.com/index.cfm?link=bio.cfm&nameid=205201&locid=1" } (D-Grand Rapids).

'SUPER DRUNK' BILLS PASS: The Senate also passed a five-bill package permitting local governments to adopt "super drunk" driving violations. { HYPERLINK "http://www.gongwer.com/index.cfm?link=legislation_billdetail.cfm&billid=2011HB492001" } , { HYPERLINK "http://www.gongwer.com/index.cfm?link=legislation_billdetail.cfm&billid=2011HB492101" } , { HYPERLINK "http://www.gongwer.com/index.cfm?link=legislation_billdetail.cfm&billid=2011HB492201" } , { HYPERLINK "http://www.gongwer.com/index.cfm?link=legislation_billdetail.cfm&billid=2011HB492301" } and { HYPERLINK "http://www.gongwer.com/index.cfm?link=legislation_billdetail.cfm&billid=2011HB492401" } were all passed on unanimous votes.

The package contains a bill sponsored by former Rep. Paul Scott (R-Grand Blanc), who was recalled in November.

Supreme Court Rejects Request To Review Consumers Plan

The Supreme Court is letting stand the renewable energy plan of Consumers Energy, rejecting a request that it review the proposed plan established under the 2008 changes in Michigan's electric policy.

In an order released Tuesday, the court, in In Re: Review Of Consumers Energy Renewable Energy Plan (SC docket No. 143613) said it was not persuaded it should review the plan based on the questions raised.

The Association of Businesses Advocating Tariff Equity had challenged the plan after it was modified and approved by the Public Service Commission and the Court of Appeals.

The Supreme Court also let stand a finding against Detroit-area journalist Diane Bukowski, who, while working for the Michigan Citizen newspaper, was arrested when she crossed police lines to take photographs for a story. In People v. Bukowski, the court said it was not persuaded it should hear her appeal.

Mortgage Criminal Actions Will Not Be Let Off, Schuette's Office Says

Michigan has not yet said if it will sign onto a settlement against banks and other mortgage lenders as part of the so-called robo-signing scandal, but a spokesperson for { HYPERLINK "http://www.gongwer.com/index.cfm?link=bio.cfm&nameid=77201&locid=1" } said any potential criminal matters would not be exempt in the settlement.

Ingham County Register of Deeds Curtis Hertel Jr. sent a letter to Mr. Schuette urging that any potential criminal matters not be excused or turned into civil matters if the state signs the settlement which is expected to be completed this week.

Those companies robbed Michigan residents of their due process rights, Mr. Hertel said, and should not get a pass from criminal liability.

The settlement would follow several years of investigations by most of the state attorneys general into the practice of robo-signing and other allegedly fraudulent activities by lenders on home mortgages and foreclosures that are blamed in part for the financial crisis that triggered the recession of 2008 and helped precipitate the unprecedented foreclosure crisis in the nation.

Michigan has been one of the states most dramatically affected by the foreclosure crisis.

In his letter, Mr. Hertel specifically mentioned a potential case against a firm named LPS that has reportedly pushed to have its case converted to a civil matter.

But John Sellek, spokesperson for Mr. Schuette, said Michigan was the first to open a potential criminal case against LPS and that would not be closed if the state did sign the settlement.

Mr. Sellek said he could not confirm if the state had made a decision on the settlement. Several states, including California and New York, have decided not to sign the settlement.

Rail Bill Clears Committee, But Discussion Remains

A bill authorizing the sale of rail track to the city of Petoskey cleared the Senate Transportation Committee on Tuesday, but it appears members want to have further discussion on the topic.

{ HYPERLINK "http://www.gongwer.com/index.cfm?link=legislation_billdetail.cfm&billid=2011HB475401" } begins the process for the state to sell the Jarman spur property, which the city intends to incorporate into its existing trail system.

But a few members of the committee said they're concerned with existing law that prohibits the trails from being used for off-road vehicles and restricting snowmobiling to less than 50 percent of the trails' mileage.

"One of the fastest growing sports is ORV use and yet we seem to avoid it like the plague," said { HYPERLINK "http://www.gongwer.com/index.cfm?link=bio.cfm&nameid=74701&locid=1" } (R-Escanaba). "This kind of language (in the law) seems counterproductive to what we should be doing and the opportunities we pursue."

{ HYPERLINK "http://www.gongwer.com/index.cfm?link=bio.cfm&nameid=101501&locid=1" } (R-Hart) also expressed concern for limiting snowmobile use on the trails and suggested the law be amended in another bill, however it may not be possible because of federal regulations. Deb Brown with the Department of Transportation said she would research that issue further and Mr. Casperson said that discussion could move over to the Senate Outdoor Recreation and Tourism Committee, which Mr. Hansen chairs.

{ HYPERLINK "http://www.gongwer.com/index.cfm?link=bio.cfm&nameid=53401&locid=1" } (D-Flushing) said a senior center in his community wanted to use a nearby bike path for senior citizens to get out and drive their golf carts, but were told that's not permitted. He said, perhaps, that's another area to discuss further.

"There are too many shortcomings I thought," he said.

Kelly Bartlett, legislative liaison for the Department of Transportation, said the questions from committee members about the future of rail in Michigan and the ORV issue are something the department would be happy to discuss further with lawmakers.

Mr. Bartlett said the language dealing with the trail's use came in 1976 when the rail industry and department were in different places than they are now.

Members seemed to be in agreement that the bill shouldn't be held up because of these ongoing discussion items, and it was reported unanimously to the full Senate.

Concealed Weapons Changes Sent To New Committee

A bill changing the process for obtaining a license to carry a concealed weapon has been referred to another committee after reaching a stalemate in the Senate Judiciary Committee.

{ HYPERLINK "http://www.gongwer.com/index.cfm?link=legislation_billdetail.cfm&billid=2011SB5901" } was the subject of a hearing in November, where the bill was changed to keep license approval at the county level, but allow counties to process non-resident applications for a $20 fee. The Michigan Association of County Clerks and Michigan of Chiefs of Police had indicated opposition to the bill and { HYPERLINK "http://www.gongwer.com/index.cfm?link=bio.cfm&nameid=82701&locid=1" } (R-Grand Ledge) said sponsor { HYPERLINK "http://www.gongwer.com/index.cfm?link=bio.cfm&nameid=25101&locid=1" } (R-Mayville) should work out the remaining issues with stakeholders.

But the bill was suddenly referred Tuesday to the Senate Natural Resources, Environment and Great Lakes Committee.

Mr. Jones told Gongwer News Service that was done by request of Mr. Green. Ryan Mitchell, an aide to Mr. Green, said they would like to see the bill move along in the process.

He said there is no timeline yet for action before the new committee, but Mr. Green plans to discuss the issue with { HYPERLINK "http://www.gongwer.com/index.cfm?link=bio.cfm&nameid=74701&locid=1" } (R-Escanaba), the chair.

Mr. Green is a member of that committee, but is not a member of the Judiciary panel.

NO-CARRY ZONES: The Judiciary panel did take testimony on a related bill, { HYPERLINK "http://www.gongwer.com/index.cfm?link=legislation_billdetail.cfm&billid=2011SB86301" }, which would expand the people permitted to carry a gun in no-carry zones such as schools and churches to the employees of licensed professional investigators.

{ HYPERLINK "http://www.gongwer.com/index.cfm?link=bio.cfm&nameid=107701&locid=1" } (R-Lowell), the bill sponsor, said it's often the employees of the license holder who are out doing the work.

The Michigan Council of Private Investigators supports the change. Mr. Jones said a vote would take place next week.

TWO-INCH RULE: The committee did report { HYPERLINK "http://www.gongwer.com/index.cfm?link=legislation_billdetail.cfm&billid=2011HB458901" }, which deals with a rebuttable presumption a government is not liable for a person's injury on a sidewalk if the gap is less than two inches big.

Senate Session Cancelled For Thursday

The Senate will not hold session on Thursday because some members are attending the National Prayer Breakfast in Washington, D.C.

The breakfast marks the 60th anniversary of the interfaith event, which hosts the president, along with elected officials, visiting foreign dignitaries and other guests.

When asked to comment about why session was cancelled for the annual event, Amber McCann, spokesperson for Senate { HYPERLINK "http://www.gongwer.com/index.cfm?link=bio.cfm&nameid=55701&locid=1" } (R-Monroe), said, "The majority leader's office received a formal bipartisan, bicameral request in writing from members of the Legislature asking for consideration to allow members to attend this event."

Bob McCann, spokesperson for Senate { HYPERLINK "http://www.gongwer.com/index.cfm?link=bio.cfm&nameid=60101&locid=1" } (D-East Lansing), said { HYPERLINK "http://www.gongwer.com/index.cfm?link=bio.cfm&nameid=209301&locid=1" } (D-Southfield) is the only Democrat planning to attend.

The House will hold session on Thursday, said House Republican spokesperson Ari Adler.

Capitol Job Marketplace Updated

Gongwer's Capitol Job Market page, a feature Gongwer is pleased to offer featuring jobs available around the Capitol, has been updated.

Campaign Notes

PETERS CAMPAIGN: Brian Love will head { HYPERLINK "http://www.gongwer.com/index.cfm?link=bio.cfm&nameid=7801&locid=1" }' (D-Bloomfield Hills) campaign in the new 14th U.S. House District, Mr. Peters announced Tuesday. Mr. Love was most recently field organizer for the House Democratic Caucus.

Mr. Peters also announced a number of union endorsements from within the new district, including the Communications Workers of America AFL-CIO Unified Council of Michigan, Detroit Building Trades Council, Michigan Building and Construction Trades Council, Michigan Maritime Trades Port Council, and Michigan Regional Council of Carpenters and Millwrights.

FERGUSON RUNNING: Joel Ferguson, long-time member and current chair of the Michigan State University Board of Trustees, announced Tuesday that he will run for re-election this fall.

"This is a time of unprecedented growth and harmony at MSU, and I look forward to continue helping with our Administration's initiated projects," Mr. Ferguson said on announcing his candidacy.

University board members are nominated at the party conventions for the ballot, but Mr. Ferguson would be expected to be a shoo-in given his tenure on the board (all but two years since 1986) and his now fifth two-year term as chair.

VERHEULEN ANNOUNCES BID FOR 74TH DISTRICT: Republican Rob VerHeulen, mayor of Walker and general counsel to The Meijer Foundation, has announced he plans to run for the solidly GOP 74th House District.

"We are at a cross roads in Michigan; the next 2 years will prove to be crucial in the economic recovery of our state. I believe I have something to offer in Lansing to help us continue to reinvent Michigan," he said in a statement.

The seat is now held by { HYPERLINK "http://www.gongwer.com/index.cfm?link=bio.cfm&nameid=175101&locid=1" } (R-Grandville), who cannot run again due to term limits.

VENTURE FUND: A public hearing on the new Pure Michigan Venture Match Fund will be held at 10 a.m. February 8 at the Michigan Economic Development Headquarters.

The fund is expected to begin in March after public comments have been taken and the Michigan Strategic Fund Board approves it.

DOMESTIC PARTNER BENEFITS: The results of a new poll suggest opposition to governments providing health insurance benefits to the same-sex partners of their gay and lesbian employees.

The poll, commissioned by Lambert, Edwards and Associates and conducted by Denno Research, posed the following question to 600 likely voters in the November election: "Should the State of Michigan and local municipalities use taxpayer money to offer health care benefits to domestic partners of employees, in other words, offering benefits to gay and lesbian couples and couples in common law marriages? Would you strongly support, support, oppose, or strongly oppose using taxpayer money for this purpose?"

Fifty-four percent of respondents said they would oppose such benefits while 32 percent said they would support them. The survey had an error margin of plus or minus 4 percentage points.

That legislation is the subject of a federal lawsuit.

MIRS BREAKING NEWS: Snyder Taking Case To Detroit's People ---- 11:26 a.m.

Gov. Rick SNYDER's administration will host a series of town halls in Detroit after his return from a European economic trade mission next week to take the case about the city's financial woes directly to the people, his director of urban affairs, Harvey HOLLINS III, told reporters this morning.

Hollins, who was the administration's point person in reaching out to citizens in Flint during the recent appointment of an emergency manager there, said Detroit's extremely dire financial situation is new to its residents. He said he believes Detroit citizens will find facts on the extent of the city government's financial problems sobering.

"There's a lot of information that has to get to the residents. The residents really have not been presented with the financial challenges of the city by its leadership," he said. "Long-term legacy costs equate to about $10,800 per resident in the city of Detroit. That's pretty bad."

Snyder's team is working with the NAACP and other groups to "directly bring the information to the residents" on paper, Hollins said. This is on top of Snyder's conversations with pastors and other city leaders. The Governor is planning on meeting with Detroit lawmakers today to address their concerns.

No dates or locations have been announced.

A public dialogue gets Detroit's residents closer to the Governor and eases fears about some perceived hidden agenda to "divert democracy." It allows residents to ask questions directly of Snyder. It's not about "taking over Detroit" it's about creating a fiscally sound Detroit.

Hollins said the "carrot" to Detroit residents is the creation of a stable fiscal environment in Detroit. It's not punitive. The citizens need to know that the state cannot get national investors into Detroit to create opportunities because of the government's financial insecurity.

Some residents are fearful about the "takeover" perception of state government taking an active role in their city's finances and their concerns "need to be respected," Hollins said.

"We want to get to a point where we have a stable platform so we can build on it," he said. "The carrot is building that stable platform."

Groups of residents are beginning to see the city's financial information presented and "are concerned" and "want something done," Hollins said. They want crime taken care of right now. They want streetlights on right now.

Flint has already been through a financial emergency manager, Hollins said, so "this isn't new territory" for the citizens there. Also, with the crime problems in Flint, there were a number of residents "crying for help" so the environment for incoming EM Mike BROWN was much different.

"This is a new experience and there's some histories we need to be sensitive to with regards to (Detroit) and the residents," he said. "They haven't received enough information. This whole financial situation for the city hasn't been clearly transparent."

The Governor stressed numerous times during today's 40-minute roundtable conversation with reporters that the proposed consent agreement released Tuesday is a draft document. There is some "wiggle room," but he refused to be pinned down on what, specifically, is negotiable, other than to say he wanted to see all of the city's concerns "on the table."

Snyder: Don't Like Agreement? Propose Something Else

With a large photo of the Detroit skyline behind him, { HYPERLINK "http://www.gongwer.com/index.cfm?link=bio.cfm&nameid=245801&locid=1" } on Thursday said he was encouraged Detroit officials were discussing a counter-offer on his controversial proposed consent agreement to address the city's financial crisis, but clearly seemed to outline certain specifics that any proposal would have to include.

While Mr. Snyder refused to take the bait on questions of whether any consent agreement would have to include a financial advisory board, his answers seemed to imply a financial board would be needed. Also, any consent agreement would have to include a penalty in the form of an emergency manager if the city refused or failed to live up to the agreement.

And Mr. Snyder said city officials could not expect any financial assistance in the short-term from the state.

Mr. Snyder also said Detroit residents should not see the proposed consent agreement as punitive. It is a way of helping Detroit get back on the path of greatness, Mr. Snyder said, which everyone should want.

And Harvey Hollins, Mr. Snyder's urban affairs advisor, said Mr. Snyder would take the proposal to the public in Detroit to discuss its outlines and implications. Those town hall meetings would not take place next week because Mr. Snyder is scheduled to be out of the country, but Mr. Hollins said they were being scheduled as soon as possible.

One thing the administration considers important is for city residents to understand fully the magnitude of its problems, Mr. Hollins said. For example, Detroit's "legacy costs" of pensions and retiree health care amount to $10,800 per resident, he said.

But the timeframe to act is drawing near, Mr. Snyder said, with the financial review team looking over the city's finances scheduled to make a report to Mr. Snyder by March 26. Mr. Snyder then has 10 days to act on the proposal, if that means naming an emergency manager.

{ HYPERLINK "http://www.gongwer.com/index.cfm?link=bio.cfm&nameid=105001&locid=1" } announced Thursday evening that the Detroit financial review team would meet early next week.

"As has been the case for several months, I am in regular contact with the Bing administration and various council members," Mr. Dillon said in a statement. "Based on recent conversations, it is possible that a proposal from the city could be ready for the review team's consideration, perhaps as soon as this weekend. With the deadline for the review team to report to the governor looming, time is of the essence."

Asked if he had to act within that timeframe, Mr. Snyder said { HYPERLINK "http://www.gongwer.com/programming/legislation_billdetail.cfm?billid=2011HB421401" } does not contemplate not acting.

Late Wednesday, officials with Detroit Mayor Dave Bing said he and members of the city council were meeting to negotiate a counter-proposal to the consent agreement.

Reports said the counter proposal at this point could give Mr. Bing close to emergency manager powers. But on Twitter, Mr. Bing said he did not know to what the reports were referring.

While Mr. Snyder welcomed news that city officials were working on an alternative, he also laid out some aspects that he likely would require in a counter-proposal.

Mr. Snyder's proposal calls for a financial advisory board that would have oversight of Detroit's finances. And whether a board had nine members as he proposed, a financial advisory board is "one of the fundamental things" to help the city.

"The concept of a financial advisory board is good," Mr. Snyder said. "Instead of viewing the advisory board as an adversarial body, which it isn't intended to be, think about this: If you're running an organization, whether it's a city or any organization, and you have the opportunity to say now to help you - because there is a history of, how many decades of financial challenge - now there's a group in this particular draft of nine financial experts, that would have a wide background and you could draw on their expertise to help the mayor and city council to develop their budget. Most people would be very excited to say, 'I'm really glad I don't have to go pay some huge consulting fees to have a group of that kind of expertise to help us make decisions.'"

The proposed consent agreement also says that if city officials challenge the consent agreement, an emergency manager would be named. Some in Detroit have called that close to extortion, but Mr. Snyder said they should then come up with another proposal.

However, he also said that any agreement had to include some penalty for non-action to meet the financial requirements.

City officials have said they will need money from the state to help fix the problems, but Mr. Snyder said several times they should not expect any short-term funding. The state is still working through its own financial difficulties, Mr. Snyder said.

And Mr. Snyder said repeatedly the consent agreement was not intended to punish Detroit.

"This should not be an adversarial situation," Mr. Snyder said. "We're all in this together."

And he said the state is trying to do many good things for Detroit. He pointed to his public safety message he outlined a week ago, which focused on Detroit and three other cities with extremely high crime rates, and legislative action is underway on a regional transit system for Detroit and the region.

S.E.I.U. Pushing Own Collective Bargaining Petition

Yet another proposed constitutional amendment ballot drive is in the works as the Service Employees International Union hopes to place the Michigan Quality Home Care Council into the Constitution and ward off the legislative attempt to eliminate it.

The proposal, which has been submitted to the Board of State Canvassers for approval as to form, would establish the council for the purpose of "improving the availability, reliability and skills of the individual provider workforce. The council, which appears to be a slight tweak in name from the current Michigan Quality Community Care Council, also would provide a registry of providers of in-home care to seniors and people with disabilities.

But probably the key piece of the proposal ensures collective bargaining rights by constitutionally enshrining them as public employees only for collective bargaining purposes. A bill that has been pending on the Senate floor since November ({ HYPERLINK "http://www.gongwer.com/index.cfm?link=legislation_billdetail.cfm&billid=2011HB400301" }) would declare such workers not to be public employees.

The council would have 11 members, including nine appointed by the governor with expertise in participant needs. The directors of the departments of Community Health and Human Services, or their designees, also would serve on the council.

The language also makes clear that the new council would inherit the authorities, duties and obligations of the Michigan Quality Community Care Council.

The proposed language, which will be taken up at the Monday canvassers meeting, comes as a broader coalition of unions pursues a sweeping constitutional amendment protecting collective bargaining rights.

A spokesperson for SEIU did not return a message seeking comment.

Judge Imposes Restraining Order On Flint E.M.

The legal troubles facing the law allowing state-appointed emergency managers to exercise greater powers continued to mount Thursday with the placement of a restraining order on Flint Emergency Manager Michael Brown by a judge.

Once again, the issue surrounded the Open Meetings Act, and whether the financial review team named by { HYPERLINK "http://www.gongwer.com/index.cfm?link=bio.cfm&nameid=245801&locid=1" } to assess the city's financial condition should have met in public. Ingham Circuit Judge Rosemarie Aquilina placed a restraining order on Mr. Brown after a Flint city employee union filed suit against the law over the Open Meetings Act issue.

"Because these proceedings were conducted illegally, including the appointment of Michael Brown as emergency manager, the court has quite properly enjoined Mr. Brown from acting on behalf of the city of Flint," Lawrence Roehrig, secretary-treasurer of the American Federation of State, County and Municipal Employees Local 25, said in a statement. "As emergency manager, he has announced he will privatize various city assets and services, including the city jail, waste collection, water services, and golf course maintenance. Because of the shroud of secrecy these public bodies have utilized in their deliberations, it is uncertain how far Mr. Brown may have gone with his plans."

That same question caused problems for the state in implementing an emergency manager for the Highland Park schools and has clouded the review process in Detroit, where Ingham Circuit Judge William Collette has ruled the review team must meet in public.

"In each case, these proceedings were conducted in secret, without notice to the public and without keeping minutes," Mr. Roehrig said. "Such proceedings by a public body are in flagrant violation of the Open Meetings Act.

Ms. Aquilina has scheduled a hearing on the issue for 4 p.m. Tuesday.

Caleb Buhs, spokesperson for the Department of Treasury, said neither Mr. Brown nor Flint Mayor Dayne Walling is in charge of the city. Department directors will run their departments while the court case plays out.

The state has not yet decided whether to appeal Mr. Collette's ruling on whether financial review teams have to comply with the Open Meetings Act.

Petition Approval Bill Granted I.E. After More Drama On House Floor

The tense back and forth between { HYPERLINK "http://www.gongwer.com/index.cfm?link=bio.cfm&nameid=230301&locid=1" } and House Republican leadership continued Thursday as she struggled to be recognized by the chair and to force a vote on immediate effect on { HYPERLINK "http://www.gongwer.com/index.cfm?link=legislation_billdetail.cfm&billid=2011HB506301" }

The bill requires that a committee distributing a petition drive for an initiated act or constitutional amendment have that proposed petition language approved by the Board of State Canvassers.

{ HYPERLINK "http://www.gongwer.com/members/Segal-Kate.jpg" }{ HYPERLINK "http://www.gongwer.com/index.cfm?link=bio.cfm&nameid=230301&locid=1" } tried a variety of ways to keep HB 5063 from leaving the House chamber.

The bill passed on Wednesday on a near party-line vote, but the issue of immediate effect was not taken up over the objection of Ms. Segal (D-Battle Creek).

She submitted a motion to have the vote reconsidered that was brought up Thursday. There was insufficient support for the motion, therefore the vote was not reconsidered.

Prior to that, { HYPERLINK "http://www.gongwer.com/index.cfm?link=bio.cfm&nameid=210301&locid=1" } (R-Midland) began session by making a parliamentary inquiry of { HYPERLINK "http://www.gongwer.com/index.cfm?link=bio.cfm&nameid=206701&locid=1" } (R-Livonia), the speaker pro tempore, whether the House would accept signatures as support for a request for recorded votes and if the House would continue its longstanding practice that motions must be made orally after being recognized by the chair.

As previously reported in Gongwer News Service, Mr. Walsh indicated to Mr. Stamas that the Constitution requires recorded votes for only specific actions in the Legislature and immediate effect votes are not on that list.

That is left up to the House to establish its own rules and the House does not accept signatures as support for a motion.

Ms. Segal asked for a point of order to challenge Mr. Walsh's ruling, but was told that he was not making a ruling, simply stating what the rule was.

Mr. Stamas then moved for immediate effect over the loud objections again of Ms. Segal. Mr. Walsh asked those in support of immediate effect to stand, which Republican members did, and then granted immediate effect.

Ms. Segal then submitted a request to have the vote reconsidered again next week.

She was informed by Mr. Walsh that the bill had already left the chamber.

Ms. Segal said she submitted her request before the bill was removed from the chamber.

When he was handed the motion, Mr. Walsh said the bill had already left.

Ms. Segal tried to challenge that ruling and asked for a roll call vote, but Mr. Walsh said it could not be challenged because he did not make a ruling.

"We would like to render our objection to your visual impairments today please," Ms. Segal said.

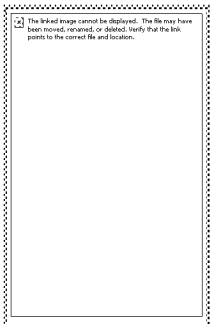
That statement was met with boos from Republicans on the floor.

House Bars Videotaping Of Thursday's Session From Floor

In an unusual and rare move Thursday, House { HYPERLINK "http://www.gongwer.com/index.cfm?link=bio.cfm&nameid=226901&locid=1" } barred House staff from videotaping or photographing session from the floor.

No specific reason was given, other than that the speaker has the right to decide that each day.

"Today's decision was no," said Mr. Bolger's spokesperson Ari Adler.



House { HYPERLINK "http://www.gongwer.com/index.cfm?link=bio.cfm&nameid=226901&locid=1" } barred staff from filming Thursday's session.

This was the first time this session that Mr. Bolger barred staff from doing so.

Such access is routinely given when the staff from either party asks for permission, or if a media outlet seeks permission.

House Democratic spokesperson Katie Carey said Democrats were not notified ahead of time that they could not film Thursday's session. As a staffer was setting up his camera, he was informed he could not tape.

"We're extremely disappointed that the majority barred us from videotaping," she said. "We're curious as to why."

Ms. Carey said she wondered if the Republicans didn't want documentation to show how political they were being.

The session began with continued drama surrounding the process of how { HYPERLINK "http://www.gongwer.com/index.cfm?link=legislation_billdetail.cfm&billid=2011HB506301" } was granted immediate effect and moved to the Senate. (See related story.)

Mr. Adler said there was nothing specific about Thursday's session that Mr. Bolger didn't want recorded.

He also noted that Michigan Government Television broadcast the entirety of Thursday's session and House staff could have videotaped the proceedings from the gallery.

Mr. Adler said barring staff from being able to videotape the proceedings was not a violation of the Open Meetings Act.

"Everything the House did was open and people were able to see it," Mr. Adler said.

"It is something we make a daily decision on," Mr. Adler said. "(Today) they were told not to by their employer."

The speaker technically employs the staff members from both parties.

Detroit Senators Blast Snyder Consent Agreement

The five senators who represent Detroit in the Senate ripped into the consent agreement proposed to fix the city's financial crisis, but declined to offer their own solutions.

Major flaws in Mr. Snyder's proposal include giving too much power to a financial advisory board the governor would control and effectively allowing the state to remain in control of city government indefinitely, Senate { HYPERLINK "http://www.gongwer.com/index.cfm?link=bio.cfm&nameid=35001&locid=1" } (D-Detroit), { HYPERLINK "http://www.gongwer.com/index.cfm?link=bio.cfm&nameid=36301&locid=1" } (D-Detroit, { HYPERLINK "http://www.gongwer.com/index.cfm?link=bio.cfm&nameid=161801&locid=1" } (D-Highland Park), { HYPERLINK "http://www.gongwer.com/index.cfm?link=bio.cfm&nameid=32801&locid=1" } (D-Detroit) and { HYPERLINK "http://www.gongwer.com/index.cfm?link=bio.cfm&nameid=161201&locid=1" } (D-Detroit) said at a news conference.

The senators said Mr. Snyder's comments Thursday backing his proposal offered more reason for concern.

"We all agree there's a fiscal crisis," Mr. Hunter said. "Something needs to be done. We want the governor to work with our mayor and city council in the spirit of cooperation and collaboration."

Mr. Hunter criticized Mr. Snyder's comments Wednesday that there is a "cultural problem" in Detroit that causes its officials to resist change.

But Mr. Hunter also said the exchange of sharp words between Detroit Mayor Dave Bing and Mr. Snyder this week is alarming.

"I'm concerned about this just devolving into a war of rhetoric," he said.

But while the five senators clearly dislike the consent agreement Mr. Snyder proposed, they declined to offer an alternative. Mr. Snyder needs to negotiate with Mr. Bing and the Detroit City Council. The five senators have no direct say in what the consent agreement will look like, Mr. Hunter said.

"I don't think it's our role here today to negotiate any kind of construct," Mr. Hunter said. "The only thing we have to respond to is what the governor proposed 48 hours ago and what he doubled down on today."

Senate Panel OKs Interstate Health Care Compact Bill

Legislation that would allow Michigan to join an interstate compact to suspend the operation of the controversial federal health care act was sent to the full Senate by the Health Policy Committee on Thursday.

The panel reported { HYPERLINK "http://www.gongwer.com/index.cfm?link=legislation_billdetail.cfm&billid=2011SB97301" } on a 6-1 vote with { HYPERLINK "http://www.gongwer.com/index.cfm?link=bio.cfm&nameid=155301&locid=1" } (D-Ann Arbor) the only committee member opposing the bill.

Under the measure, each state in the compact would be able to suspend the operation of a federal law regarding health care within that state.

If the state suspended the federal law then it would be responsible for the financial obligation of regulating health care in its state.

However, the bill also said each state in the compact would still be eligible for its full portion of federal funding, even if it had suspended the federal law.

Interstate compacts to provide health care are allowed under the federal health care act that was passed in 2010 and will go before the U.S. Supreme Court this month.

Presuming it becomes law in Michigan, the compact would take effect if ratified by two states and approved by Congress.

While in some respects the measure is seen as a way to get out of some aspects of the federal act, Isabelle Terry of Rockford argued the measure would actually be worse than the federal act. She suggested the compact could go further than the federal measure and actually dictate what people could do and eat and what kind of medical treatment they could get.

The panel also heard testimony on { HYPERLINK "http://www.gongwer.com/index.cfm?link=legislation_billdetail.cfm&billid=2011SB59501" } (though it did not act on the bill) that would create a basic health care program for low-income people. The federal act would already expand those eligible for Medicaid, but { HYPERLINK "http://www.gongwer.com/index.cfm?link=bio.cfm&nameid=84601&locid=1" } (R-Saginaw Township), the bill sponsor, said the proposal would provide basic coverage for about 100,000 people whose incomes were between 133 percent and 200 percent of the poverty level.

Mark Cook with Blue Cross Blue Shield of Michigan countered that, in fact, low-income persons would have a greater range of options available under a health care exchange.

So far, however, the Legislature has held up efforts by the administration to see a health care exchange enacted in the state.

Ban On Young Drivers Using Mobile Phones Passes Senate

New drivers with a level one or level graduated driver's license would be barred from using mobile phones under a bill passed Thursday by the Senate.

{ HYPERLINK "http://www.gongwer.com/index.cfm?link=legislation_billdetail.cfm&billid=2011SB75601" } cleared the Senate on a 28-10 vote. It would make the use of a mobile phone by such drivers a civil infraction and is designed to ensure young drivers are focused on operating their vehicle. The offense would be a primary one.

Motorists with graduated licenses at levels one or two are under 17. Once a resident turns 17, he or she can obtain a level three license - with all the rights of an adult license - provided that the driver has met the necessary training requirements.

"While we will never know if Kelsey would still be here today if she wasn't talking on her phone that day, I think it is safe to say that probationary drivers should be completely focused on the road and not on cell phone conversations," Mr. Walker said, referring to Kelsey Raffaele, a 17-year-old with a level two license when she was killed in a traffic crash while talking on her mobile phone. "That is what my bill will help to accomplish."

But Senate { HYPERLINK "http://www.gongwer.com/index.cfm?link=bio.cfm&nameid=60101&locid=1" } (D-East Lansing) said she thought the bill should apply to all motorists.

"We have a duty to ensure people on the road are safe," she said. "People are in car accidents every single day. We should do whatever we can to protect the public from all drivers who are distracted by any means.

Senate Panel Approves Environmental Leader Program

Businesses that are meeting state and federal environmental requirements, and helping other companies to do so as well, would see discounts on their permits and preference on state contracts under legislation approved Thursday by the Senate Natural Resources, Environment and Great Lakes Committee.

The bills ({ HYPERLINK "http://www.gongwer.com/index.cfm?link=legislation_billdetail.cfm&billid=2011SB93901" }, { HYPERLINK "http://www.gongwer.com/index.cfm?link=legislation_billdetail.cfm&billid=2011SB94001" }, { HYPERLINK "http://www.gongwer.com/index.cfm?link=legislation_billdetail.cfm&billid=2011SB94101" }, { HYPERLINK "http://www.gongwer.com/index.cfm?link=legislation_billdetail.cfm&billid=2011SB94201" }) moved on a party-line vote with little discussion after the changes to the main bill, SB 939, were explained.

Among the key changes, the bill would allow the Department of Environmental Quality to remove a company from the Environmental Leader Program for minor violations, said Senate { HYPERLINK "http://www.gongwer.com/index.cfm?link=bio.cfm&nameid=151101&locid=1" } (R-West Olive), sponsor of the bill.

The program, which would replace the current Clean Corporate Citizen Program, requires applicants to have clean records for the three years prior to the application, or have an approved plan to address any outstanding violations. But it waives certain penalties for violations after being admitted to the program.

The substitute, however, would allow the department to find the company or facility had committed a pattern of minor violations that affect natural resources, Mr. Meekhof said.

The program would also be more accessible to small business under the substitute. Companies with fewer than 100 employees could qualify by maintaining a sustainability policy.

The program now also calls on participants to spread their experience to others. The bill requires that the company's plan include methods for disseminating information on its programs and experiences, but the substitute also encourages companies to "initiate community-based activities" as part of that effort.

Mr. Meekhof said that could include providing mentoring to other facilities seeking to enter the program.

Businesses admitted to the program would see a 15 percent reduction in their fees to the DEQ during the first year. Any permits that it does need would see priority treatment from the DEQ and would last for twice the normal period. It also would see half the inspections and would have 72 hours' notice of those inspections.

Environmental Leader participants also would see preference in bidding on state contracts and seeking state grants and loans, and they would qualify for free technical assistance from the department.

If a company in the program does have a violation, it would not be subject to civil fines as long as the violation was reported within 24 hours, the company acted quickly to correct it, and the violation was not intentional and did not endanger public safety.

Clinic Inspections Could See Additional Funds

On the heels of a report from Right to Life of Michigan that licensed abortion clinics around the state are not being regularly inspected, and acknowledgement from the Department of License and Regulatory Affairs that neither are the rest of the state's free-standing surgical clinics, the department's budget could include some additional funding for inspectors, { HYPERLINK "http://www.gongwer.com/index.cfm?link=bio.cfm&nameid=124401&locid=1" } (R-Gaines Township), chair of the Senate Appropriations Licensing and Regulatory Affairs Subcommittee, said Thursday.

Exactly how much money the Bureau of Health Systems could see for inspectors is still in flux. Mr. Jansen said after a hearing on the Right to Life report that he would be working with the agency to determine how many people it would need to clear up the current backlog of inspections.

"My goal is let's get the inspections up to speed," Mr. Jansen said.

The agency has requested a fee increase to allow it to hire additional inspectors, but Mr. Jansen said that would not likely be part of the fiscal year 2012-13 budget that he expected to be ready for some initial hearings after next week.

"I could not get a fee increase done quickly enough," he said. Instead, he said he would try to find some one-time general fund money for the coming fiscal year.

The issue came to Mr. Jansen's attention with the recent release of the report (See { HYPERLINK "http://www.gongwer.com/index.cfm?link=news_articledisplay.cfm&article_id=510460113&newsedition_id=5104601&locid=1" }) citing the state for lax enforcement of health and safety regulations on abortion clinics.

Mike Pemble, director of the Bureau of Health Systems, which oversees medical clinics, told Gongwer News Service then and the subcommittee Thursday that he does not have the staff to conduct the required annual inspections of the 120 licensed free-standing surgical facilities in the state.

Mr. Pemble has proposed increasing the fee for each facility to $4,653 a year from the current $238 to allow him to hire the additional inspectors he would need to see each facility once every three years, but he told the subcommittee he ultimately would want to return to annual inspections for each clinic.

Mr. Jansen said such a change would take more time and research. Not only would he have to sell the rest of his caucus, and the Legislature, on the need for the increase, but he said he would have to understand how that change would affect all the various types of surgical clinics before he could do that.

He also raised concerns that there still were some differences in enforcement between abortion clinics and other types of surgical clinics. Noting a case where aborted fetuses, some in containers with patient information still attached, were found in a trash container behind a clinic, but the clinic was fined only $100, he questioned whether a different type of surgical facility, for a similar offense (improperly disposing of medical waste and disclosure of patient information) would have received a similar penalty.

Mr. Pemble said most of those kids of cases have to be addressed by the Department of Attorney General. He said his primary hammer is rescinding the license.

Mr. Jansen indicated a need for a solution that would not be driven by the priorities of the attorney general. "Sometimes in the last 20 to 30 to 40 years it's been a priority and sometimes it hasn't," he said of taking action against abortion clinics violating licensing requirements or the law in general. "We need to fix this."

Mr. Pemble said there could be value in looking at the penalties under the current licensing laws, particularly those for operating without a license. "Are they strong enough to get people to come in voluntarily to get a license?" he said.

And he said in some cases there would be value to having sanctions short of rescinding a license, which, for most clinics, means closing its doors.

Mr. Jansen said he would also be exploring the current law the requires abortion clinics to be licensed only if more than half of the patients they see have abortions performed.

Ed Rivet, legislative liaison for Right to Life of Michigan, said the number was essentially a political compromise in 1999 to have any licensing for the clinics at all. But he also said the group did not want to force physicians who might perform an occasional first trimester abortion for a regular patient to have to go through the time and cost of getting a license.

Mr. Jansen said he also feared, at this point, forcing more clinics into the system to be inspected when the agency does not have the resources to inspect the ones there already. And he said he did not know if those clinics, while not licensed as surgical facilities, were licensed and inspected under some other regulation.

Counties Take Issue With New Revenue Sharing Program

Michigan's counties have saved the state more than $1 billion in the past few years by not taking revenue sharing to help the state with its budget problems, but don't feel the state has appreciated that effort.

At the House Appropriations General Government Subcommittee on Thursday, Deena Bosworth of the Michigan Association of Counties said the state is continuing to cut payments to county's for a variety of mandated services.

Under { HYPERLINK "http://www.gongwer.com/index.cfm?link=bio.cfm&nameid=245801&locid=1" }'s proposed budget, he expands the discretionary pool of funds, known as the Economic Vitality Incentive Program, from $200 million to $210 million.

Ms. Bosworth said on the surface it looks like it's a $10 million increase.

"In fact, it's a bigger cut than last year," she said.

She said it is $42 million less than what counties were anticipating under the statutory formula.

The program replaces statutory revenue sharing in the current fiscal year and provides funding for local governments if they are meeting best practices, such as reforming employee compensation and being transparent to the public about their finances.

In the current fiscal year, to comply with PA 152, which requires most public entities to spend no more than a certain amount of money on their employees' benefits, local governments could opt out of the mandated hard dollar cap on how much they could spend on health benefits for employees or alternative of splitting the cost 80/20. Doing so did not have any bearing on qualifying for Economic Vitality Incentive Program funds, part of which was contingent on putting more of the cost of benefits on employees.

Under the new proposal, if local units opt-out next year, they would face a 10 percent cut to all payments issued under incentive funding for best practices. That's because the boilerplate in the revenue sharing budget hands out a 10 percent penalty to those entities failing to submit a certification that they have complied with PA 152.

"To us it appears that this program is designed to force counties to yet again earn their revenue sharing dollars," she said. "We implore you to recognize our contributions, our efforts and our proven worthiness for the revenue sharing dollars owed to us."

{ HYPERLINK "http://www.gongwer.com/index.cfm?link=bio.cfm&nameid=266801&locid=1" } (R-Harrison Township) said there are injustices that have gone on with revenue sharing and said that the state is not requiring its departments to earn its money.

Officials from Grad Rapids and Saginaw testified in favor of the EVIP program.

Ken Cole with Governmental Consulting Services Incorporated, representing Detroit, said the city is eligible to receive $121 million under the proposal.

But he said that is phenomenally insufficient for all of the services the city has to provide.

He said the state continues to shackle the city to an agreement several years ago that the state walked away from, that has kept the city from receiving millions in revenue sharing payments.

While the state freed itself from its obligation, it has not returned to the city the ability for it to set its income tax rate, and pull itself up by its bootstraps.

"Free us also, that's only fair," Mr. Cole said.

New Food Code Nearing Completion

Revisions to the Food Code, including a new system for categorizing violations, won approval Thursday from the Senate Agriculture Committee and are nearing final legislative approval.

The committee made relatively minor changes to { HYPERLINK "http://www.gongwer.com/index.cfm?link=legislation_billdetail.cfm&billid=2011HB513001" } . Cottage food operations could have gross sales of up to $25,000, up from the current $15,000 under one amendment. Additionally, retail outlets and processing facilities selling maple syrup or honey would be exempt from licensure up to $25,000 in gross sales, up from the current $15,000.

But the major changes in the legislation would update the state's Food Code to the 2009 federal food law instead of the 2005 version. The significant changes in the federal food code include mandatory training for employees in food allergy awareness, banning the ordering of undercooked burgers from children's menus, declaring that cut tomatoes and cut leafy greens are considered potentially hazardous and must be temperature controlled for safety, and new standards for how to par-cook foods safely.

The new violation system would go from the current two categories of "critical" and "noncritical" to three categories. The least serious would be "core item," the second most serious "priority foundation item" and the most serious "priority item."

{ HYPERLINK "http://www.gongwer.com/index.cfm?link=bio.cfm&nameid=245801&locid=1" } called for the revised Food Code in his special message on health and wellness last fall.

The committee reported the legislation on a unanimous 5-0 vote.

Stokes: Mangalitsa Pigs Allowed

Breeders of Mangalitsa pigs in the state should be able to continue their operations without concern for the state's new invasive species order on certain breeds of swine, Natural Resources { HYPERLINK "http://www.gongwer.com/index.cfm?link=bio.cfm&nameid=303701&locid=1" } said in a letter to the group representing those breeders.

Mr. Stokes, in the letter dated March 8 but disclosed Thursday, said the Mangalitsa farms the DNR had inspected so far, at the request of the owners, had not had any animals matching the characteristics of the Russian and Eurasian boar the department is trying to remove from the state.

"It is the DNR's understanding that purebred Mangalitsa swine do not exhibit characteristics listed in the Declaratory Ruling, other than potentially striped piglets," Mr. Stokes said in the letter to the American Mangalitsa Breeders Association general counsel Jason Foscolo. "The Invasive Species Order would not prohibit purebred Mangalitsa swine based solely on this characteristic."

But he left open the offer for DNR staff to visit any breeder still concerned to verify that their stock did not fall under the order.

Mr. Foscolo, in an earlier letter to the department (See { HYPERLINK "http://www.gongwer.com/index.cfm?link=news_articledisplay.cfm&article_id=510370106&newsedition_id=5103701&locid=1" }), said the group would take what action was necessary, including legal action, to ensure its members were not caught under the order.

But Mr. Stokes said Mr. Foscolo was incorrect in asserting the department was only seeking to eradicate feral swine. He said the department was looking to remove a certain species of boar from the state.

The boar listed in the order has most typically been raised on hunting ranches, which are also argued to be the source of most of the feral hogs found in the state and other areas of the country. Domestic hog farmers had requested the order as a way to combat the problem of feral hogs and their potential to transmit disease to the domestic herds.

Mr. Stokes also said the Mangalitsa breeders have the same notice as most other parties both that the order was coming and to its contents.

"The DNR has reached out to individuals that it knew may be affected by the Invasive Species Order, but DNR had no way of specifically identifying Mangalitsa breeders," Mr. Stokes said. "However, general public notice, consistent with DNR policies, was given for all public meetings held by the DNR on the Invasive Species Order, Declaratory Ruling, and enforcement of the Invasive Species Order."

CHEMO DRUG BILLS TO SEE FURTHER TESTIMONY: Testimony will continue on next week in the House Health Policy Committee on bills from both chambers that effectively would require equal health insurance treatment for oral and intravenous chemotherapy drugs.

{ HYPERLINK "http://www.gongwer.com/index.cfm?link=bio.cfm&nameid=84601&locid=1" } (R-Saginaw Township), sponsor of { HYPERLINK "http://www.gongwer.com/index.cfm?link=legislation_billdetail.cfm&billid=2011SB54001" } and { HYPERLINK "http://www.gongwer.com/index.cfm?link=legislation_billdetail.cfm&billid=2011SB54101" }, testified that the bills would not add huge costs to insurance companies or patients. He said they are not requiring insurance companies to cover oral chemotherapy drugs, but just ensuring that oral medication isn't treated more restrictively.

{ HYPERLINK "http://www.gongwer.com/index.cfm?link=bio.cfm&nameid=210901&locid=1" } (R-Lake Angelus), committee chair, is the sponsor of similar bills also on the agenda, { HYPERLINK "http://www.gongwer.com/index.cfm?link=legislation_billdetail.cfm&billid=2011HB513201" } and { HYPERLINK "http://www.gongwer.com/index.cfm?link=legislation_billdetail.cfm&billid=2011HB513301" }.

C.M.U. CHARTER OFFICE: Cindy Schumacher has been named the new executive director of the Central Michigan University Center for Charter Schools.

Ms. Schumaker previously served as deputy director in the center, which oversees the university's charter school program, and takes over for Mary Kay Shields, who had served as interim director since the departure of Jim Goenner in 2010.

"I feel honored and eager to take on this new role with the Center," Ms. Schumacher said. "We have such a dedicated and talented staff, and I look forward to working with them to raise the bar for all of Michigan's public school students."

JEFF-JACK SPEAKER: Robert Gibbs, former press secretary to President Barack Obama, is slated as the keynote speaker for the Michigan Democratic Party's Jefferson-Jackson Day Dinner on April 28 at the Cobo Center in Detroit.

"Robert Gibbs can provide intimate insight into the Obama campaign and administration," Michigan Democratic Party Chair Mark Brewer said. "His experience and leadership will be a great addition to this year's Jeff-Jack program."

YARD WASTE BILLS HEAD TO SENATE: Two bills governing yard waste found Democrats and Republicans joining together on both sides of the issue Thursday.

The bills would allow landfills to again take yard waste, which would increase the amount of methane, and so electricity, they can produce. The state's composting facilities feared this would put them out of business and endanger particularly urban agriculture.

{ HYPERLINK "http://www.gongwer.com/index.cfm?link=legislation_billdetail.cfm&billid=2011HB426501" } was approved 67-40 and { HYPERLINK "http://www.gongwer.com/index.cfm?link=legislation_billdetail.cfm&billid=2011HB426601" } was approved 66-41. While both vote totals are close to the partisan split in the House, the votes were not party-line.

{ HYPERLINK "http://www.gongwer.com/index.cfm?link=bio.cfm&nameid=158101&locid=1" } (R-DeWitt) argued on the floor that the bills allow complete and total local control over the entire process.

"More landfills, more layoff notices and more greenhouse gases make these bills bad policy for the State of Michigan," James Clift of the Michigan Environmental Council said in a statement opposing the bills "Instead Michigan should be exploring policies that would make us a clean energy leader around the country."

Among the new supporters is Romulus Mayor Alan Lambert and Inkster Mayor Pro-Tempore Marcus Hendricks, he said.

Mr. Anderson also announced Thursday polling that he said put him in a dead heat with { HYPERLINK "http://www.gongwer.com/index.cfm?link=bio.cfm&nameid=5601&locid=1" } (D-Detroit) across the new district and gave him the lead in the areas of the district covered by his current Senate district.

KILDEE ENDORSEMENT: The Michigan Regional Council of Carpenters has endorsed Dan Kildee in his run for the 5th U.S. House District.

Mr. Kildee is seeking to succeed his uncle, retiring { HYPERLINK "http://www.gongwer.com/index.cfm?link=bio.cfm&nameid=1901&locid=1" } (D-Flint).

BERRYMAN RECEIVES SUPPORT OF TEACHERS' GROUPS IN 57TH DISTRICT: Former senator and current Michigan Education Association Uniserv Director Jim Berryman has announced he has the support of the MEA and the Hillsdale-Lenawee County Education Association in both the August and November elections.

"Jim truly understands the needs of all of the residents of Lenawee County and will help bring common sense back to the Legislature, Jeff Condon of the HLCEA wrote. "Jim Berryman is someone that Lenawee County can believe in."

In the August primary for the Democratic nomination, Mr. Berryman will face Harvey Schmidt.

{ HYPERLINK "http://www.gongwer.com/index.cfm?link=bio.cfm&nameid=276301&locid=1" } (R-Clayton) is serving her first term in that seat.

According to a statement, the Michigan Regional Council of Carpenters and Millwrights and the Michigan Laborers' District Council have endorsed Mr. Singh.

"In this tough economy, Sam Singh understands the importance of building our communities. He has the experience and know how to make an excellent state legislator," Geno Alessandrini, business manager for the district council wrote.

Mr. Singh faces Susan Schmidt in the Democratic primary.

Judge Reinstates Flint Mayor, Council

Flint Mayor Dayne Walling and the Flint City Council have had their powers restored after a judge ruled Tuesday that the state appointed financial review team looking into the city's finances violated the Open Meetings Act.

The decision involving the Flint emergency manager was the second major blow issued Tuesday against the controversial emergency manager act. Earlier Ingham Circuit Judge William Collette had ordered the Detroit Financial Review Team to sign no consent order with Detroit until a contempt hearing is held in his court next week.

In the Flint matter, Ingham Circuit Judge Rosemarie Aquilina also invalidated all decisions made by Flint Emergency Manager Michael Brown. Ms. Aquilina said nothing in 2011 PA 4 exempted the financial review team from the 1976 Open Meetings Act.

Gongwer will have more on this story in Tuesday's report.

Appeals Court Stays Order; Flint E.M. Returns To Power

The Court of Appeals has restored Flint Emergency Manager Michael Brown to operate under the provisions of 2011 PA 4 while it hears an expedited review of the Ingham Circuit Court ruling that threw out the emergency manager in that city.

The court issued an order Monday afternoon in Muma v. Flint Financial Review Team (COA docket No. 309260), setting the schedule for briefs in the appeal which would take place likely within a month. Following the schedule set in the order, all briefs and counter arguments would have to be completed within 21 days.

Ingham Circuit Judge Rosemarie Aquilina ruled that Mr. Brown could not continue in his role as emergency manager, appointed there by Governor Rick Snyder last fall, since the panel violated the Open Meetings Act. That put Flint Mayor Dayne Walling and the city council back in charge.

In its order, the court ruled Mr. Brown could operate under the powers of the emergency manager act during the pendency of the appeal.

4-3 Supreme Court Upholds Oakland County Redistricting

In what could be characterized as 4-3 Republican-Democratic split on the officially nonpartisan Supreme Court, the justices ruled a politically charged law ordering Oakland County to reapportion itself was constitutional.

That reapportionment process is scheduled to begin on Wednesday when 2011 PA 280 ({ HYPERLINK "http://www.gongwer.com/index.cfm?link=legislation_billdetail.cfm&billid=2011HB518701" }) takes effect, and the process will be the second undertaken by the county since the 2010 census, but this reapportionment will be under the authority of the Republican-controlled county board of commissioners. The first reapportionment was overseen by the countywide officers, who are dominated by Democrats.

The decision, in Houston v. Snyder (SC docket No.144691), came as an order overturning a Court of Appeals decision that held the act was a local act and failed to meet the constitutional guidelines for enacting a local act.

The court heard arguments last week over whether to grant leave to appeal the decision. Instead of deciding to hold more arguments, the four-member majority ({ HYPERLINK "http://www.gongwer.com/index.cfm?link=bio.cfm&nameid=75601&locid=1" }, { HYPERLINK "http://www.gongwer.com/index.cfm?link=bio.cfm&nameid=114801&locid=1" }, { HYPERLINK "http://www.gongwer.com/index.cfm?link=bio.cfm&nameid=298201&locid=1" } and { HYPERLINK "http://www.gongwer.com/index.cfm?link=bio.cfm&nameid=148801&locid=1" }) said simply the act "is not a 'local' act in violation" of Article IV, Section 29 of the Constitution.

locid=1" } sided with the majority; { HYPERLINK "http://www.gongwer.com/index.cfm?link=bio.cfm&nameid=114701&locid=1" } wrote the dissent.

The majority opinion in the order was not signed, so it is unknown who wrote the opinion.

However, { HYPERLINK "http://www.gongwer.com/index.cfm?link=bio.cfm&nameid=114701&locid=1" } clearly wrote the main dissent, joined by { HYPERLINK "http://www.gongwer.com/index.cfm?link=bio.cfm&nameid=151701&locid=1" } ({ HYPERLINK "http://www.gongwer.com/index.cfm?link=bio.cfm&nameid=153201&locid=1" } concurred in a separate short dissent), in which she said the only way in which 2011 PA 280 could be constitutional would be for the court to sever the section that requires Oakland County to begin to reapportion beginning on Wednesday, March 28.

"If it is possible to sever the constitutionally flawed section of a statute while the remainder of the statute could function, the court should sever the flawed section. That is what the Court of Appeals did in this case. This court should affirm its decision," Ms. Kelly wrote in her concluding comments.

The action passing the statute was one of the more politically charged in recent legislative history. The day before the Supreme Court heard the arguments, Frank Houston, the chief plaintiff in the case and the Oakland County Democratic Party chair, released emails the party had obtained under the Freedom of Information Act that showed that despite the argument of supporters that the measure would save money, it was clearly being pushed because Republicans wanted the act passed to protect their majority on the board.

Both the majority and dissent acknowledged the partisan nature of the law. Ms. Kelly simply referred to it as a "politically charged case."

The majority said the plaintiffs "made much" of the political nature of the act. But the majority decision also said in effect every reapportionment effort tries to provide a partisan advantage to one party or another. "Notwithstanding this reality," the court said, political motives cannot be a basis for rendering a decision on the constitutionality of the law.

A major difference between the majority and dissent was in reading the entirety of the statute. The majority cited previous decisions in saying that an effort to segregate a section would misinterpret legislative intent, and that a statute must be read so all the sections harmonize with themselves.

Ms. Kelly wrote that, "The whole, however read, cannot cure the constitutional flaw of one of its parts." The majority, she said, argues that because one part of the law is unconstitutional it can still be constitutional because the rest of the act is constitutional and that is not possible.

The two sides also differed on the specific date in the act and whether it made the act an unconstitutional local act (that would require approval by a two-thirds majority of the Legislature as well as the local public).

The majority held that the act included enacting conditions that meant it was open-ended enough that theoretically most counties could fall under its provisions. It also referred to an admission made by the plaintiff's counsel that if the act had been enacted before the first reapportionment had occurred, no constitutional question would be raised against the act.

The specific date implementing the required reapportionment process was part of the transitional nature of the act, the majority said. Oakland County was the only county affected beginning Wednesday, but that still did not render the measure a local act because every county "remains potentially subject in the future" to the act's requirements.

But Ms. Kelly argued it was the time frame, and the fact that as defined the only county that could be affected on Wednesday, March 28, would be Oakland County, made the provision a local act. "It is a date certain, and it will never occur again," she wrote. And where only one municipality at one specified time is affected, an act is effectively a local act, she said.

Reaction to the decision fell along predictable partisan lines. Democrats fumed that the Republican majority on the court was in the tank for Oakland County Republicans out of partisan loyalty, not impartial legal analysis.

"It's just another outrageous act by the Republican Party in Michigan," said Frank Houston, chair of the Oakland County Democratic Party. "It's clear that this Supreme Court has set aside legal precedent and our state Constitution all for Republican gain. Outraged would be one word for it. Even more, I think it's extreme disappointment that the Supreme Court would choose the politics of one party over the rule of law."

Mr. Houston said the statute clearly was a local act. Only Oakland County - now and in the future - could possibly qualify under the terms of the statute, he said.

Leading up to the decision, Mr. Houston said Republican attorneys told him legally, Democrats should expect to win, but politically, they should expect to lose.

A federal lawsuit is possible, Mr. Houston said. There also might be some aspects of Ingham Circuit Judge William Collette's ruling that the Supreme Court did not address upon which Democrats could seize.

But Oakland County Executive L. Brooks Patterson, who led the effort to change the redistricting process in the county, said he simply went through the system to secure the legislation.

"Did we do anything illegal? Did we do anything improper?" he said. "You may not like the result, but it was all done by the rules, by the book."

That is more than the Oakland County Democratic Party can say, Mr. Patterson said, saying the local party remains tainted from the scandal that broke in 2010-11 in which the party's then chair and his then top staffer pleaded no contest to charges related to fraudulently filing the names of persons to run for office without their knowledge. The two were filing the names of people under the banner of a fake tea party with the goal of siphoning votes from Republican candidates.

However, the plot collapsed after the fraudulent activity was exposed and the fake tea party failed to secure ballot access.

Asked to respond to Democratic complaints that Oakland County Republicans, after not having control of the redistricting process for the first time ever, acted like sore losers by going to their Republican colleagues in the Legislature and { HYPERLINK "http://www.gongwer.com/index.cfm?link=bio.cfm&nameid=245801&locid=1" } to change the rules, Mr. Patterson said: "What we did was absolutely legally proper. Whether you like the end result depends on which political horse you're riding."

Democrats were unmoved. In response to a tweet from Mr. Patterson about how the county secured the statute legally, { HYPERLINK "http://www.gongwer.com/index.cfm?link=bio.cfm&nameid=151201&locid=1" } (D-Onondaga) tweeted in response, "Unethical and legal, yes."

Democratic Party Chair Mark Brewer branded the ruling as one to "allow GOP corruption." He took aim at the two Republican incumbents up for election on the 2012 ballot, { HYPERLINK "http://www.gongwer.com/index.cfm?link=bio.cfm&nameid=148801&locid=1" } and { HYPERLINK "http://www.gongwer.com/index.cfm?link=bio.cfm&nameid=114801&locid=1" }.

"Today, the Michigan Supreme Court has shown it is on the side of political corruption and not the rule of law. Two other lower courts have already declared this law unconstitutional, yet Republicans on the Supreme Court chose to ignore the law and the facts in order to permit Republican corruption," Mr. Brewer said in a statement. "This plan was set in motion months ago and email records prove that the sole intent was nothing more than a Republican power grab. Our justices should be standing up for the Constitution instead of promoting corruption. Voters will not forget this decision and will hold this Court accountable this November. Justices Markman and Zahra have once again proven they are nothing more than puppets of special interests."

State, Detroit Near Consent Agreement; Activists Drown Out Meeting

DETROIT - Enveloped in chaos, the state-appointed review team examining Detroit's finances declared before an unruly crowd the city is in a state of severe financial stress on Monday, paving the way for { HYPERLINK "http://www.gongwer.com/index.cfm?link=bio.cfm&nameid=245801&locid=1" } and the city to negotiate a consent agreement in next 10 days and avoid an emergency manager which all sides say they want to avoid.

If the two sides cannot reach a deal, then Mr. Snyder would likely have to name an emergency manager to take control of operations in Michigan's largest city. However, earlier today, Mr. Snyder was upbeat about the prospects of reaching an agreement. And { HYPERLINK "http://www.gongwer.com/index.cfm?link=bio.cfm&nameid=105001&locid=1" }, who for most of the hour and a half meeting at Cadillac Place could not be heard because the crowd was so loud, said the hope is to have a consent agreement in place by the end of the week.

The review team stopped short of declaring a financial emergency in the city, which usually is a prelude to the governor naming an emergency manager. If talks on a consent agreement fall apart, Mr. Snyder could still declare a financial emergency within 10 days and proceed down the path of naming a manager.

Racial undertones coursed through the crowd and throughout the meeting.

Activist Minister Malik Shabazz, who is associated with the New Black Panther Nation, said this is white on black crime.

"This is white supremacy and we will fight you," Mr. Shabazz said. "Before we let you take over our city, we will burn it down first."

One man in the crowd stood up to address no one in particular and said he supported the city having an emergency manager, which the crowd turned on immediately. He was told to shut up and called an "Uncle Tom."

As he tried to explain himself, the crowd shouted "Tom!" over him and drowned him out.

Later in the meeting, with tensions running high, a man in the back of the room began yelling at a security guard for putting his hands on him.

Nearly everyone in the room turned their attention to the altercation as it played out, with no one listening or paying attention to the review team.

Before the meeting even began, the crowd got things started by shouting "No takeover!", a refrain that would be echoed later at various points in the meeting.

Well more than a dozen times, the crowd took over the meeting, shouting at the review team and over one another.

At first Mr. Dillon and the team waited for the crowd to stop chanting and then tried to move forward until the next interruption.

After numerous interruptions, Mr. Dillon said the team was just going to push through and if the crowd couldn't hear that was their fault.

He later called those shouting out "rude," which did not sit well with those doing the shouting.

Throughout the meeting the crowd took turns chanting "No takeover," "This is what Democracy looks like!", "Where's our money?", and then stopped the meeting for several minutes as they sang several verses of "We Shall Overcome."

One woman in the crowd chastised the review team saying they were "raping the city of Detroit."

Another focused her rage on Mr. Dillon, "You Democrat turned Republican!"

The crowd also turned on former Chief Justice Conrad Mallett, a member of the review team, for what the crowd saw as fixing up the mess of Mr. Dillon. One woman referred to Mr. Dillon as a "white man," and said Mr. Mallett was acting like a "good colored person."

"Don't do it Conrad!" the crowd shouted for about a minute.

During the public comment portion of the meeting, Mr. Shabazz said the city needs help from the state that it wants and deserves, "not the help that you want to impose upon us."

Even after the meeting, Mr. Shabazz continued to bellow as Mr. Dillon was meeting with reporters to explain what happened since it was so difficult to hear during the meeting.

"It's fascism...Damn the governor... worst governor we've ever had," Mr. Shabazz shouted over and over.

Mr. Dillon said during the course of negotiations, the state also introduced the idea of a project manager, who would handle the reform measures identified that need to take place. A chief financial officer would also be added.

The makeup of the nine-member advisory board was also altered. Instead of predominantly being made up of members the state had final say on, it would include four from the state, two from the mayor, two from the city council and one member agreed to by the mayor and the governor and approved by the city council.

During the meeting, the review team worked on its report to send to the governor and worked off a draft that Frederick Headen, director of the Department of Treasury's Local Government Services Bureau, had developed.

Some members of the team wanted nothing to do with it since they had no hand in writing it. Changes were made to the draft during the meeting and one page was deleted entirely. Mr. Dillon did not say what the contents of that page included.

Mr. Dillon said in the next 10 days, he and the governor are hopeful an agreement can be reached. He said the governor does not want to be in a situation where he has to declare an emergency.

"He does want a consent agreement," he said.

At a press conference earlier in the day, Mr. Snyder sounded upbeat about the prospects of a negotiated deal with the city.

"My role is not to run the city of Detroit," he said. "I don't want an emergency manager."

He said discussions between his administration and city officials are focusing on a deficit elimination plan that they are calling a "financial stability agreement," because the city did not want a consent agreement.

Mr. Snyder said he wants some additional elements added to the deficit elimination plan that would qualify it as a consent agreement under Public Act 4 of 2011 ({ HYPERLINK "http://www.gongwer.com/index.cfm?link=legislation_billdetail.cfm&billid=2011HB421401" }). One of the additions would be to give Detroit Mayor Dave Bing some of the expanded powers provided under that statute.

Mr. Bing remains hospitalized after undergoing surgery this weekend for a perforated intestine. Mr. Snyder said he has not spoken with Mr. Bing, but has sent flowers. He said he met with six of the nine city council members Monday and his staff continues to meet with Mr. Bing's staff. He called the meetings with city officials productive and said they have not been adversarial.

In a joint statement released late Monday afternoon, Deputy Mayor Kirk Lewis and Detroit City Council President Charles Pugh said significant progress is being made to develop a financial stability agreement "to restore Detroit fiscally and preserve the democratic process."

"The Mayor's Office and City Council have agreed not to discuss details until a final agreement is reached. Our goal is to have an agreement by the end of the week," the statement read.

The statement also said the mayor and the majority of the council are not in favor of a consent agreement. That might explain why officials keep calling the plan under discussion a "financial stability agreement."

Mr. Snyder said he hopes the city council will have the ability to see something in writing before its meeting on Tuesday, but he isn't putting any pressure on them to approve a deal then because he wants them to be comfortable.

"It's a serious agreement," he said.

Mr. Bing and the city council roundly rejected Mr. Snyder's proposed consent agreement earlier this month, because it called for a financial review team to take authority for city's fiscal situation.

The city council's counterproposal calls for the financial review team to advise the mayor and city council on fiscal issues, as well as asks the state to provide more than $130 million in immediate funding for the city and to assist it in collecting taxes from non-resident workers in the city.

Whether the two sides could enter into a consent agreement was in doubt until Friday evening when the Court of Appeals unanimously overturned an Ingham Circuit Court judge's prohibition on the city of Detroit and the state entering into such an agreement.

Also on Friday, a coalition of 30 of the nearly 50 labor unions that represent city of Detroit workers announced they had ratified concessions negotiated with Detroit Mayor Dave Bing.

The concessions would save the city $54 million a year, but Mr. Snyder and Mr. Dillon had made clear that was not nearly enough to resolve the city's cash crisis.

"Detroit's finances are in a very difficult shape," Mr. Snyder said. "Times are very difficult in Detroit and we need to all work together to get to financial stability."

There are three things the city needs, Mr. Snyder said. Detroit needs to get its finances stable and moving in a positive direction, do a better job of providing basic services for the residents and grow the city.

"The long-term answer to Detroit's issues is a growing Detroit," he said.

Senate Subcommittee To Raise Film Incentive To $40M

A Senate subcommittee will recommend increasing funding for the state's film incentive program from $25 million to $40 million.

The Senate Appropriations General Government Subcommittee is scheduled to approve the budget for a variety of smaller state departments and agencies Tuesday ({ HYPERLINK "http://www.gongwer.com/index.cfm?link=legislation_billdetail.cfm&billid=2011SB95401" } ). There's been a significant change in the Senate target for that budget. Initially, Senate Republicans planned to spend $25 million less in that budget than { HYPERLINK "http://www.gongwer.com/index.cfm?link=bio.cfm&nameid=245801&locid=1" } recommended.

Now { HYPERLINK "http://www.gongwer.com/index.cfm?link=bio.cfm&nameid=50001&locid=1" } (R-Troy), the subcommittee chair, said the caucus has raised the target to $15 million more than Mr. Snyder's recommendation.

{ HYPERLINK "http://www.gongwer.com/members/pappageorge.jpg" }{ HYPERLINK "http://www.gongwer.com/index.cfm?link=bio.cfm&nameid=50001&locid=1" } said the discussion on film incentive funding will continue.

Initially, { HYPERLINK "http://www.gongwer.com/index.cfm?link=bio.cfm&nameid=84601&locid=1" } (R-Saginaw Township), the Appropriations Committee chair, said the $25 million cut would be accomplished through halving { HYPERLINK "http://www.gongwer.com/index.cfm?link=bio.cfm&nameid=245801&locid=1" }'s $50 million recommendation to upgrade the state's information technology systems. But Mr. Pappageorge said Monday that he never planned on that big of a cut and instead will call for trimming the program to $48 million.

"We need that desperately," he said.

Mr. Pappageorge said bumping up the film incentive program to $40 million is designed to allow the conversation on that issue to continue.

In another switch from Mr. Snyder's budget, Mr. Pappageorge plans to handle revenue sharing to counties differently. Mr. Snyder had proposed requiring counties to follow a set of best practices to receive their funds, much like cities, villages and townships had to do starting with the current fiscal year.

However, Mr. Pappageorge said cities, villages and townships receive 80 percent of their revenue sharing from the constitutional formula and 20 percent through the Economic Vitality Incentive Program, while counties get no money through the Constitution. So he decided to wall off 80 percent of the county revenue sharing money and instead make just 20 percent of it subject to the EVIP program. And he set the funding for counties at the same level they received in the current year.

Other budget bills on the Senate side remain works in progress. In the higher education budget, the plan at this point is to retain the tuition restraint language Mr. Snyder recommended requiring universities to keep tuition increases below 4 percent to receive additional funding. However, no decision has been made on Mr. Snyder's proposal to allocate more funding to universities based on their success at meeting certain metrics. The Senate Appropriations Subcommittee is scheduled to vote Thursday on { HYPERLINK "http://www.gongwer.com/index.cfm?link=legislation_billdetail.cfm&billid=2011SB95501" }.

The K-12 budget ({ HYPERLINK "http://www.gongwer.com/index.cfm?link=legislation_billdetail.cfm&billid=2011SB96101" }) also is still gelling, said { HYPERLINK "http://www.gongwer.com/index.cfm?link=bio.cfm&nameid=73001&locid=1" } (R-Traverse City), the subcommittee chair. Mr. Walker said he is examining whether to place certain programs, namely the best practices funding incentive and payment for the Michigan Public School Employees Retirement System, that Mr. Snyder has recommended as categoricals instead into the foundation allowance.

Mr. Walker said the Senate is considering some new categories for the best practices program although he did not want to go into details.

In the Department of Education budget ({ HYPERLINK "http://www.gongwer.com/index.cfm?link=legislation_billdetail.cfm&billid=2011SB95201" }), Mr. Walker has a target funding level $500,000 below Mr. Snyder's recommendation. He said that would be done by unrolling and reducing the administrative line. Mr. Walker said senators are unhappy with the lack of notice about Highland Park schools' financial crisis. The Legislature had to quickly approve funding that would allow the district's students to continue receiving their education through the Detroit Public Schools operating Highland Park school buildings or to provide funding to charter schools accepting students leaving the Highland Park system.

"We didn't hear about it until they needed an emergency appropriation, so we'd kind of like to see what's going on there in that line item," he said.

Court Of Appeals Rebuffs Ingham Circuit On E.M. Rulings

The Court of Appeals reined in a pair of rulings by two Ingham Circuit Court judges who took severe action to remedy what they said were violations of the Open Meetings Act by state-appointed review teams that examined problems in the Detroit and Flint city governments.

Monday, the Court of Appeals overturned Ingham Circuit Judge Rosemarie Aquilina's ruling that ousted Flint Emergency Manager Michael Brown from power and placed Flint Mayor Dayne Walling and the city council back in charge. The court granted the state's request for a stay on that portion of Ms. Aquilina's decision, and Mr. Brown returns to power while the case is resolved.

Also Monday, union activist Robert Davis filed an emergency appeal with the Supreme Court after the Court of Appeals' ruling late Friday evening that overturned Ingham Circuit Court Judge William Collette's decision that the state and city could not enter into a consent agreement to fix the city's finances until he held a hearing Thursday on whether the review team should be held in contempt for violating the Open Meetings Act.

Mr. Davis urged a decision by the court by Tuesday so that the hearing could proceed.

The three-judge panel held that Mr. Collette can only bar action by the review team if there is additional evidence that it violated the Open Meetings Act. The court stayed all other aspects of Mr. Collette's March 20 ruling and barred him from holding any other hearings on the issue, including the Thursday hearing.

The court further held the application for leave to appeal Mr. Collette's ruling in abeyance pending further order and retained jurisdiction.

The judges on the panel were { HYPERLINK "http://www.gongwer.com/index.cfm?link=bio.cfm&nameid=109001&locid=1" }, { HYPERLINK "http://www.gongwer.com/index.cfm?link=bio.cfm&nameid=109201&locid=1" } and { HYPERLINK "http://www.gongwer.com/index.cfm?link=bio.cfm&nameid=153101&locid=1" }. The same three judges also heard the Flint case. Mr. Kelly and Mr. O'Connell were both elected directly to the court and are generally considered independent. Mr. Whitbeck was appointed to the court by former Governor John Engler, but also is not considered a conservative firebrand.

In the Flint case, the court ordered the sides to conclude filing briefs within 21 days.

Senate Expected To Run Bill Repealing Mandatory Helmet Law

Senate Republicans apparently have decided they will no longer wait for a comprehensive auto insurance reform bill and instead will pass legislation repealing the state's longtime requirement that motorcyclists wear helmets.

The Senate is expected to take up the helmet law repeal ({ HYPERLINK "http://www.gongwer.com/index.cfm?link=legislation_billdetail.cfm&billid=2011SB29101" }) on Thursday, said Senate Republican spokesperson Amber McCann. { HYPERLINK "http://www.gongwer.com/index.cfm?link=bio.cfm&nameid=245801&locid=1" } has said he prefers to deal with the helmet issue as part of an overall insurance legislative package that addresses unlimited medical benefits for those with catastrophic injuries ({ HYPERLINK "http://www.gongwer.com/index.cfm?link=legislation_billdetail.cfm&billid=2011HB493601" }).

But that legislation appears to be in serious trouble on the House floor, where it has been stuck for months.

Additionally, on Tuesday, the Senate will vote on a bill ({ HYPERLINK "http://www.gongwer.com/index.cfm?link=legislation_billdetail.cfm&billid=2011SB35101" }) that would direct sales tax revenues from gasoline purchases to roads, Ms. McCann said.

Supreme Court Declines Schuette's Request To Bypass Court Of Appeals In Same-Sex Benefits Case

The Supreme Court overwhelmingly rejected a request from { HYPERLINK "http://www.gongwer.com/index.cfm?link=bio.cfm&nameid=77201&locid=1" } that it directly hear his case against the Civil Service Commission's awarding of benefits to unrelated adults living with state employees and bypass the Court of Appeals.

Last May, Mr. Schuette challenged the legality of the Civil Service Commission's action, asserting that it exceeded the commission's authority and violated the rights of family members of state employees who are not eligible for benefits because it allows non-family members to be eligible. Under the policy, one unrelated adult living with a state employee can receive state health benefits, as can any dependents of that adult.

Mr. Schuette later asked the Supreme Court to take up the case, bypassing the Court of Appeals, out of concern that the case would take too long to work its way through the system.

The Supreme Court rejected Mr. Schuette's request on an 8-1 vote in an order dated Friday, but released Saturday (SC Docket 144184). { HYPERLINK

"http://www.gongwer.com/index.cfm?link=bio.cfm&nameid=114801&locid=1" } dissented, saying the case warranted expedited consideration.

"Individuals and communities that are immediately affected, as well as the citizenry generally, whose constitution is at issue, are entitled to dispositive resolutions of these disputes in a reasonably facilitated manner," Mr. Markman wrote. "I would have treated each of these disputes as priority matters for our consideration."

Split Supreme Court Rules Arson Case Can Be Reheard

A directed verdict is not necessarily a resolution of the factual matters of a case, and therefore a criminal defendant can be tried a second time even after a directed verdict favoring him without violating the double jeopardy provisions in the U.S. and Michigan constitutions, the Supreme Court ruled Monday in a 4-3 split decision.

The minority in the decision in People v. Evans ({ HYPERLINK "http://courts.michigan.gov/supremecourt/Clerk/11-12-Term-Opinions/141381.pdf" \t "blank" }) charged the majority had overturned a 1996 opinion of the court that was based on a U.S. Supreme Court decision and did so without a persuasive argument.

But { HYPERLINK "http://www.gongwer.com/index.cfm?link=bio.cfm&nameid=148801&locid=1" }, who wrote the majority opinion in the case, said it was undetermined if the 1996 case, People v. Nix, was correctly decided.

A directed verdict can only be considered an acquittal to avoid the double jeopardy provisions if it resolves at least some of the factual elements charged in the case, Mr. Zahra said in the opinion joined by { HYPERLINK "http://www.gongwer.com/index.cfm?link=bio.cfm&nameid=75601&locid=1" }, { HYPERLINK "http://www.gongwer.com/index.cfm?link=bio.cfm&nameid=114801&locid=1" } and { HYPERLINK "http://www.gongwer.com/index.cfm?link=bio.cfm&nameid=298201&locid=1" }.

The case involved Lamar Evans, who was accused of burning a building, which was an unoccupied house. Mr. Zahra said the trial court, the Wayne Circuit Court, added an incorrect element to the case - whether or not the house was occupied.

Based on that decision, the trial judge issued a directed verdict in favor of Mr. Evans.

The prosecution appealed, arguing it did not have to show whether the property was occupied, and the Court of Appeals held that the trial court had erred. It ordered a new trial in the case.

Mr. Evans appealed, arguing a second trial would violate his rights against double jeopardy.

But Mr. Zahra wrote, "We hold that when a trial court grants a defendant's motion for a directed verdict on the basis of an error of law that did not resolve any factual element of the charged offense, the trial court's ruling does not constitute an acquittal for the purposes of double jeopardy and retrial is therefore not barred."

To prevent wrongly being retried under double jeopardy provisions of the U.S. and state constitutions, there has to be a resolution of the factual issues in the case, Mr. Zahra said. Even if that resolution is found later to be incorrect, if the factual matters are resolved, then double jeopardy protections are invoked, he said.

In this matter, Mr. Zahra said, the directed verdict did not resolve any of the factual matters in the case because the verdict was based on an incorrect element that was not part of the factual basis of the crime. It was based on an error of law and not to the elements of the defendant's innocence or guilt, he said.

Mr. Zahra acknowledged that the 1996 Nix case would have barred retrial, but said that case's application to another case did not consider whether it was correctly determined in the first place.

{ HYPERLINK "http://www.gongwer.com/index.cfm?link=bio.cfm&nameid=151701&locid=1" }, joined by { HYPERLINK "http://www.gongwer.com/index.cfm?link=bio.cfm&nameid=114701&locid=1" }, dissented, saying the decision essentially overruled Nix, which he argued was based on U.S. Supreme Court principles. The majority creates a distinction in its ruling that acts to elevate form over substance, he said.

And { HYPERLINK "http://www.gongwer.com/index.cfm?link=bio.cfm&nameid=153201&locid=1" } dissented, arguing the Nix decision was the governing precedent in the matter.

Campaign Notes

S.E.I.U. ENDORSES RENEWABLE ENERGY BALLOT INITIATIVE: The Service Employees Union Michigan State Council announced Monday that it is backing the proposed constitutional amendment to require utility companies to generate 25 percent of their power from renewable resources by 2025. "Michigan workers and businesses have benefited from the renewable energy standard and the momentum for investments and jobs should continue," said SEIU Michigan State Council President Marge Robinson Faville in a statement. "Our members enthusiastically endorse this ballot initiative because it's good for families, good for public health and good for our economy."

HOOGENDYK/CAIN APPEARANCE: Former Rep. Jack Hoogendyk has endorsed former Republican presidential candidate Herman Cain's 9-9-9 tax plan, and the two are scheduled to appear together next week to promote Mr. Cain's plan and Mr. Hoogendyk's run for the U.S. House.

The events are planned for April 5 at 5:30 p.m. in Benton Harbor and at 7:30 p.m. in Kalamazoo. Venues for the events had not been announced as of Monday afternoon.

Mr. Hoogendyk is challenging { HYPERLINK "http://www.gongwer.com/index.cfm?link=bio.cfm&nameid=2401&locid=1" } (R-St. Joseph) for the 6th U.S. House District.

F.R.I.B. SUPPORT: The Facility for Rare Isotope Beams proposed for Michigan State University now has a website dedicated to urging support for its funding in Congress. Onevoiceforscience.com added a FRIB advocacy page created by East Lansing film and audio producer Doug Monson, who is currently working on a project for the National Academy of Science about investment in physics research nationally.

"FRIB is a good example of the kind of science investment the U.S. needs to stay competitive in the world economy," Mr. Monson said. "Isotope research in particular is a field where we already show strong leadership. It's a source of important innovations in medicine and material."

The project is also important to MSU's physics program and to the state's economy, Mr. Monson said.

PURE MICHIGAN/COCA-COLA PROMOTION: Pure Michigan scenes and logos will soon be appearing on Coca-Cola trucks and billboards around the state as part of a joint marketing campaign that includes national drawings for four vacation packages in the state.

The joint marketing campaign, announced Monday at the Pure Michigan Governor's Conference on Tourism, includes opportunities to win trips through the MyCokeRewards website. A trip to Mackinac Island will be available April 18 through May 9, to Traverse City May 9 through May 30, to the Pure Michigan 400 at Michigan International Speedway May 30 through June 20, and to Detroit June 20 through July 11.

"By joining forces with Pure Michigan, Coca-Cola is helping to support travel across the great state of Michigan and in all of its communities where we do business," said Matthew Barribeau, Coca-Cola's vice president of sales operations in Michigan. "Through this collaborative effort, we hope to not only drive economic development across the state, but to provide vacation-goers with moments of happiness and ice-cold refreshment all summer long."

"We are always looking for innovative ways to introduce Pure Michigan to new audiences and it doesn't get much bigger than partnering with an iconic brand like Coca-Cola," said George Zimmermann, vice president of Travel Michigan. "With more than 17 million people participating in MyCokeRewards, this is a perfect opportunity to showcase the scenic beauty, great cities and exciting events that make Michigan a terrific vacation destination."

M.E.D.C. HOSTING TRIBAL ECONOMIC FORUM: The Michigan Economic Development Corporation will host a forum for the third time geared toward economic development for Indian tribes. The forum will take place May 17-18 at the Radisson Hotel Lansing, 111 North Grand Avenue.

Appointments By The Governor

THIRD CIRCUIT COURT: Margaret Van Houten of Dearborn Heights succeeds Mary Beth Kelly, who was elected to the Supreme Court, for a term expiring January 1, 2013. Ms. Van Houten will have to run to keep her seat in the November 2012 elections. The appointment is not subject to the advice and consent of the Senate.

House G.O.P. Passes One Abortion Bill, Shelves Another

A controversial abortion bill won House approval after an extraordinarily heated debate Wednesday to criminalize coercing a woman into having an abortion and require some physicians providing abortions to carry insurance, but House Republicans unexpectedly did not act on the most significant bill that would ban abortions after 20 weeks of gestation.

What was approved was { HYPERLINK "http://www.gongwer.com/index.cfm?link=legislation_billdetail.cfm&billid=2011HB571101" }{ HYPERLINK "http://www.gongwer.com/index.cfm?link=legislation_querymanager.cfm&billid=2011HB571101" } that combines a number of abortion coercion bills that had been working their way through the Legislature. It passed 70-39.

The floor substitute to the bill also changed from a felony to a civil infraction for failing to dispose of aborted fetal remains and changed which doctors would be required to carry $1 million of professional liability insurance.

But the day will likely be remembered for what was some of the more memorable floor speeches in memory. It also quickly made its way into social media circles and nabbed the attention of liberal MSNBC host Rachel Maddow.

{ HYPERLINK "http://www.gongwer.com/index.cfm?link=bio.cfm&nameid=217601&locid=1" } (D-Detroit) took to the floor and decried the fact that Republicans were launching a war on women, but not a war on poverty. She proposed an alternate way to stop unwanted pregnancies and the resulting abortions.

"Stop having sex with us, gentleman. Find somebody else to do it with," Ms. Tlaib said to a smattering of applause. "I ask women across Michigan to boycott men until these bills stop moving out of the House."

It was one of numerous passionate floor speeches on the issue from both sides.

"This bill is not about protecting women's health," said { HYPERLINK "http://www.gongwer.com/index.cfm?link=bio.cfm&nameid=230301&locid=1" } (D-Battle Creek).

Others were more blunt with their objection to the bill they felt was too intrusive into a woman's health issue.

"I'm flattered that you are all so interested in my vagina, but no means no," { HYPERLINK "http://www.gongwer.com/index.cfm?link=bio.cfm&nameid=171401&locid=1" } (D-West Bloomfield) said.

Rep. Margaret O'Brien (R-Portage) said she rejected the notion these bills are a "war on women."

She said it's an umbrella of protection for women to make sure they are not coerced into having an abortion and that institutions that provide abortions meet certain standards.

"I'm very committed to protecting the rights of women and the unborn," said { HYPERLINK "http://www.gongwer.com/index.cfm?link=bio.cfm&nameid=86701&locid=1" } (R-Lake City), the sponsor of the main bill.

{ HYPERLINK "http://www.gongwer.com/index.cfm?link=bio.cfm&nameid=279101&locid=1" } (R-Charlotte), sponsor of the 20-week abortion ban contained in { HYPERLINK "http://www.gongwer.com/index.cfm?link=legislation_billdetail.cfm&billid=2011HB571301" }{ HYPERLINK "http://www.gongwer.com/index.cfm?link=legislation_querymanager.cfm&billid=2011HB571301" }, said her responsibility to women and to society was to make sure the places where "the horrific procedure of abortion takes place are licensed and inspected.

"I would rather there be no abortions performed anywhere, tragically that is not the case," she said.

So emotional was the debate that it overshadowed a major development with the decision of majority Republicans to hold off on { HYPERLINK "http://www.gongwer.com/index.cfm?link=legislation_billdetail.cfm&billid=2011HB571201" }{ HYPERLINK "http://www.gongwer.com/index.cfm?link=legislation_querymanager.cfm&billid=2011HB571201" } and HB 5713, the latter of which contained the most controversial item in the package, banning abortions after 20 weeks with no exception for rape or incest, only one to save the life of the mother.

Ari Adler, spokesperson for House { HYPERLINK "http://www.gongwer.com/index.cfm?link=bio.cfm&nameid=226901&locid=1" } (R-Marshall), said the House would not be voting on those bills this week.

He said Mr. Bolger wants to review the language in the bills to make sure they adhere to the Constitution. Abortion rights advocates say the 20-week law would violate the Roe vs. Wade decision that legalized abortion.

"We want to address some concerns that were brought to our attention," Mr. Adler said. "We're not done with that issue. We need to look at it further."

Ms. Shaughnessy said she believes the House should act deliberately and not rush the bill.

"I certainly don't have a problem with that," she said.

She said she believes the caucus does support her bill, but said concerns have been raised about constitutionality and with the 20-week time frame.

David Maluchnik, spokesperson for the Michigan Catholic Conference, said in an email that it sounded like Mr. Bolger was taking a prudent approach to the bill.

Before the debate began, the House dispensed with all of the Democratic amendments, several of which attempted to turn the tables and require some of same restrictions placed on abortion providers on facilities that do vasectomies.

{ HYPERLINK "http://www.gongwer.com/index.cfm?link=bio.cfm&nameid=151201&locid=1" } (D-Onondaga), the sponsor of one of those amendments began shouting, saying she wanted to speak to it, but was not allowed.

As she walked away, she shouted "vasectomy!" Her amendment would have required a physician to determine that a man seeking a vasectomy needed the procedure because his life was in danger or a medical emergency existed.

One amendment by Rep. Stacey Erwin Oakes (D-Saginaw) stated that before a physician could prescribe medication for erectile dysfunction, a physician has to perform a digital rectal exam and cardiac stress test.

Planned Parenthood, though, is planning another protest day at the Capitol on Thursday morning, encouraging members on Facebook and Twitter to meet at the Capitol.

On Tuesday, about 200 Planned Parenthood supporters in pink shirts stood outside the Capitol before session, chanting and holding signs and then shouted in the lobby and tried disrupting session on several occasions. It was the largest and most vocal protest against anti-abortion legislation in years.

But on Wednesday, the gallery was relatively empty. Ms. Brown had several boxes containing 10,000 cards from constituents from around the state indicating opposition to the bills, but those were removed from the floor by a House sergeant.

Mr. Adler said such displays or presentations are a violation of House rules.

Prior to the vote, the Michigan Catholic Conference released a video message from policy advocate Rebecca Mastee, saying the package contains common sense measures.

"Considering that only 4 of the 32 abortion clinics in Michigan are licensed, which abortion advocates recognize, don't women in Michigan deserve better?" she said. "Others have erroneously stated that this legislation is a politically motivated attack on women. However, legislators were informed of egregious abortion industry practices back in March. Should they simply sit idle while verifiable reports of dirty and unlicensed facilities circulate? No, because women deserve better."

M.P.S.E.R.S. Deal Tentatively In Place As Leaders Seek Votes

Top Republican legislative leaders have a tentative agreement in place for overhauling the Michigan Public School Employees Retirement System, and it would retain the hybrid pension plan for new hires.

Some Republican senators continue to push for ending the hybrid plan for new hires and instead placing them all into a 401(k)-style defined contribution plan, but House { HYPERLINK "http://www.gongwer.com/index.cfm?link=bio.cfm&nameid=226901&locid=1" } (R-Marshall) and Senate { HYPERLINK "http://www.gongwer.com/index.cfm?link=bio.cfm&nameid=55701&locid=1" } (R-Monroe) are rounding up the votes to pass the legislation Thursday before the Legislature adjourns for the summer.

Mr. Richardville told reporters Wednesday evening after the Senate adjourned that an agreement is in place.

MATINET }

{ INCLUDEPICTURE \d "http://www.gongwer.com/public/JaseBolger.jpg" \y * MERGEFORMATINET }

Senate { HYPERLINK "http://www.gongwer.com/index.cfm?link=bio.cfm&nameid=55701&locid=1" } (top) and House { HYPERLINK "http://www.gongwer.com/index.cfm?link=bio.cfm&nameid=226901&locid=1" } are working on getting the votes for the deal.

"I think in general they (the caucus) want to make sure we do the health care thing, but we'll make sure we get another vote on it down the road so they'll have a chance to speak up and maybe the numbers will even show that they were right all along," he said. "I'm supportive of the defined contribution though, I think that's the way to go but we'll see what the study says."

Mr. Richardville said the study would cost $100,000.

Sources familiar with the bill who spoke on condition of anonymity said the new H-3 substitute for { HYPERLINK "http://www.gongwer.com/index.cfm?link=legislation_billdetail.cfm&billid=2011SB104001" }{ HYPERLINK "http://www.gongwer.com/index.cfm?link=legislation_querymanager.cfm&billid=2011SB104001" } would see other changes from the H-2 version now pending on the House floor.

The major change would be an attempt to address stranded costs that result from school districts privatizing services like food, transportation and janitorial. With those workers no longer school employees, there are fewer workers paying into MPSERS, putting considerable pressure on the system.

To address that factor, the bill would require school districts to contribute to MPSERS based on 11.9 percent of their expenditures starting in the 2013-14 school year instead of payroll. That way, the funds districts spend on contracts for privatized services would be counted toward MPSERS. This change would not affect other participants in MPSERS like public universities and community colleges, which would continue to pay based on 24.46 percent of their payroll.

And the changes to the bill also would mean no longer requiring all retirees to pay 20 percent of the cost of their health insurance premium. Current retirees 65 and older would continue to pay 10 percent under the revised plan.

As is the case in the H-2 substitute, the bill would require those in the basic pension plan to contribute 4 percent of their salary to the system and those in the Member Investment Program to contribute 7 percent. Currently, those in the basic plan pay nothing, and those in the MIP plan, the bulk of those in the pension system, pay 3.9 percent.

{ HYPERLINK "http://www.gongwer.com/index.cfm?link=bio.cfm&nameid=93801&locid=1" } (R-St. Clair) said he was disappointed in the agreement.

"If we're really going to be serious about protecting not only the retirees but also the taxpayers of the state of Michigan, we've got to shutter that system," he said of the hybrid plan that provides new hires with some pension benefit and some defined contribution. "There's been a 50-year experience on public employee pensions - that doesn't work."

A significant unknown headed into Thursday is how the approach to dealing with stranded costs by having school districts pay into MPSERS based on their expenditures will play with rank-and-file lawmakers. Sources said there is some reticence among legislative Republicans toward this proposal because they see it as penalizing those districts that have put services up for competitive bidding in an effort to save money.

Mr. Pavlov is one of those lawmakers critical of this piece of the legislation.

"We're penalizing good behavior," he said, noting that the best practices language in the K-12 budget has rewarded districts for contracting out such services.

The expectation Thursday is that House Republicans will caucus on the proposal and then vote shortly after session convenes at 10 a.m. Sources said there were 14 of the 64 members of the House Republican caucus that at one point were cool to the plan, but it appeared Mr. Bolger was having success in bringing some of those members aboard to get the 56 votes he needs.

If it passes the House, then the question is whether Mr. Richardville can find 20 votes in his caucus to pass the plan, a task that could prove a little tricky considering 20 Republican senators voted to end the hybrid plan and shift to defined contribution when the bill first passed the Senate.

Mr. Pavlov said he did not know whether enough votes existed to stop the bill in the Senate.

"We had 20 votes to convert to defined contribution in the Senate, and that's the only record we've got to look at," he said.

Battle Over Collective Bargaining Is On

Less than an hour after unions submitted more than double the signatures necessary for a proposal that would enshrine collective bargaining rights in the Constitution and nullify a series of laws passed in the last 18 months, business organizations announced an unprecedented coalition to oppose that proposal and several others that could appear on the November ballot.

Department of State officials have until September to analyze the signatures through a random sample to determine whether the Protect Our Jobs organization met the minimum number needed of 322,609.

"It far exceeded anyone's expectations," Protect Our Jobs spokesperson Dan Lijana said. "That's why we submitted them now. We had more than double what's required by the state."

The proposal is expected to be the biggest fight on the ballot this year. Already there is worry among House Democrats that union money that usually would go toward helping their campaigns will be focused on the collective bargaining measure.

The union effort has been shrouded in near total secrecy. Leaders of the proposal have refused to say what laws the proposal would void, other than a possible right-to-work law. Since the news conference to announce the proposal, the leader of Protect Our Jobs, Ken Brock, has declined all interview requests. The organization didn't even announce its plan in advance to submit its 684,286 signatures Tuesday.

Mr. Lijana said he did not know when the organization would begin television advertising and direct mail, saying its efforts had solely been focused to this point on collecting petition signatures.

Unions launched the collective bargaining proposal after seeing an avalanche of new laws passed by the Republican-led Legislature and signed by { HYPERLINK "http://www.gongwer.com/index.cfm?link=bio.cfm&nameid=245801&locid=1" } eliminating or curbing union rights.

Among the new laws unions found abhorrent:

*Enabling state-appointed emergency manager to void the contracts of local government and school district workers;
*Prohibiting university graduate student research assistants from unionizing;
*Barring several subjects from collective bargaining between teachers and school districts, such as performance evaluation systems and district policy for firing or disciplining employees subject to the tenure law; and
*Setting limits on how much public entities will contribute toward their employees' health benefits with the workers required to pay the rest.

The move also is a pre-emptive strike to prevent the Legislature and Mr. Snyder from enacting a right-to-work law that would bar mandatory union membership for employees of entities that have collective bargaining agreements with their workers. Some Republicans have called for pushing such legislation, but Mr. Snyder has resisted it and the movement toward a bill has faded in deference to fighting the ballot proposal.

Protect Our Jobs said in a statement that more than 85 percent of its signatures were collected by 41,000 volunteers.

Signatures for ballot proposals are due to the Department of State by July 9. There are at least 10 other proposals having petitions circulated, six of which have a realistic chance of getting the signatures needed to qualify for the ballot.

One advantage the collective bargaining proposal could have is that it would be at worst the second proposal listed on the ballot as opposed to being the last one voters have to sift through. If the referendum to repeal the Local Government and School District Fiscal Accountability Act, also known as PA 4 of 2011, fails to make the ballot because of legal battle over the point-size used on its petition heading, then the collective bargaining proposal would be the first one on that portion of the ballot.

Almost immediately after unions submitted the signatures, a huge coalition of business groups announced it had formed a unified committee, Citizens Protecting Michigan's Constitution, to oppose many of the proposed ballot measures. Gongwer News Service first reported business groups' plan to organize against the ballot proposals in this unusual fashion.

The members of the committee include the Associated Builders and Contractors of Michigan, Business Leaders for Michigan, the Detroit Regional Chamber, the Grand Rapids Area Chamber of Commerce, the Michigan Chamber of Commerce, the Michigan Manufacturers Association, the Michigan Association of Realtors, the Small Business Association of Michigan, and the West Michigan Policy Forum.

"Job creators and taxpayers are opposed to special interest attempts to manipulate the Michigan Constitution," said Rich Studley, president and CEO of the Michigan Chamber of Commerce. "This coalition is committed to educating Michigan voters on the perils of these proposed initiatives and the risks involved if they pass."

At this point, the coalition is opposing the proposal requiring utilities to generate 25 percent of their energy from renewable sources by 2025, the collective bargaining proposal, and the proposed constitutional amendment ensuring the state's home help workers can unionize, said Jim Holcomb, general counsel for the Michigan Chamber of Commerce.

So far, the coalition has not formally decided to support retaining PA 4 although all members of the coalition want to see the law kept in place. The coalition is taking a wait-and-see posture on the other proposals to see if they make the ballot, such as those that would restrict the ability of the Legislature to raise taxes, prevent new international border crossings without a public vote and expand the number of casinos in the state.

The strategy in general was to emphasize to voters to simply vote no on all proposals to avoid cluttering the Constitution. That would allow for a consolidated messaging and fundraising effort instead of trying to fight the proposals one by one.

"It's a natural extension," Mr. Holcomb said. "A lot of people have looked at these and thought how damaging these will be for the state of Michigan. It just makes sense to come together in a coalition format and fight them and to really take the message across the state of Michigan."

The Mackinac Center for Public Policy also denounced the collective bargaining proposal.

"This ballot measure is a radical constitutional amendment that makes government-sector unions more powerful than the Legislature," said Joseph G. Lehman, president of the Mackinac Center for Public Policy, which condemned the union proposal although it is not part of the coalition against multiple proposals. "If it passes, unions will set public policy in secret negotiations with their government employers. Lawmakers won't be able to override anything they decide."

Detroit Counsel's Lawsuit Over Consent Agreement Dismissed

MASON - Moving quickly Wednesday, Ingham Circuit Judge William Collette dismissed a lawsuit brought by Detroit's corporation counsel against the consent agreement the city had reached with the state, saying that only the mayor and city council could direct the counsel to bring the lawsuit.

"I've been a city attorney," Mr. Collette told lawyers as he listened, almost impatiently, to the arguments raised by Detroit deputy counsel James Noseda before ruling from the bench in the Ingham County Courthouse. "This lawsuit is not valid. It is dismissed."

The city has a consent agreement with the state, Mr. Collette said, and "people need to learn to live with this and move forward."

In a statement, { HYPERLINK "http://www.gongwer.com/index.cfm?link=bio.cfm&nameid=105001&locid=1" } said with the decision, the state could continue to "work collaboratively" with the city on implementing its financial turnaround plan.

{ INCLUDEPICTURE \d "http://www.gongwer.com/public/DaveBing.jpg" \y * MERGEFORMATINET }

Detroit Mayor Dave Bing appeared relieved at the judge's quick decision.

Detroit Mayor Dave Bing told reporters the decision means the city can now return to the business of implementing major changes.

"This legal challenge has been an unfortunate distraction, but now it's time for the city to move forward," he said. "The city is still in a crisis, and we can't have all these distractions and think we're going to bring the city back."

Not said directly by Mr. Dillon was that the dismissal should also clear the way for up to $80 million in revenue sharing to go to the city. The Department of Treasury had said it would withhold those funds if the lawsuit continued.

Mike Hodge, the attorney hired by Mr. Bing to argue for dismissing the lawsuit, said that if the lawsuit was not dismissed, the city could see payless paydays and essentially no money to operate as early as Friday.

Speaking to reporters after the hearing that resulted in the case being dismissed, Mr. Noseda said he did not know if Corporation Counsel Krystal Crittendon would appeal the action.

Ms. Crittendon brought the lawsuit without either the Detroit City Council or Mr. Bing formally asking for it to be brought (although it later emerged that members of the council and Mr. Bing tacitly blessed the move in a closed meeting). And Mr. Noseda said to the court there was a question of law that should be heard if Ms. Crittendon could bring that action. He said it was disappointing that Mr. Collette had not heard arguments on that issue or ruled on that basis.

But Mr. Hodge said if Ms. Crittendon had a reasonable concern over her ability to bring the action, Mr. Collette decided that question for her. "If the corporation counsel is truly concerned about her ethical duties, this judge has decided it for her," Mr. Hodge said.

The case marked the latest incident in which Mr. Collette has made a major ruling regarding the state's emergency manager law or the process of instituting financial repair programs for communities.

He remarked on this, saying, "I don't know why I keep getting these."

His earlier rulings, related to the emergency manager appointed for Highland Park schools and for the financial review team for Detroit, had to do with whether the financial review team had to meet in public under provisions of the 1976 Open Meetings Act. He held they did, but was overturned by the Court of Appeals.

This situation was unique, and Mr. Collette said he had never had such a hearing.

From the moment he walked into the courtroom, it was clear that however he ruled, it would be with dispatch. Within the first minute, he granted a motion to allow Mr. Bing's attorney to intervene in the case.

Ms. Crittendon had argued in her lawsuit that the consent agreement was void because the state owed the city millions in revenue sharing monies, as well as funds for a variety of issues including parking tickets. Mr. Noseda said the city cannot have a contract with a creditor.

But Michelle Brya, representing the state, said many of the issues raised in the lawsuit were being handled administratively.

She also argued that the corporation counsel could not bring the action in the first place.

And it was on the ability of the counsel to bring the lawsuit without the authorization of either Mr. Bing or the council that Mr. Collette focused in his questioning of Mr. Noseda.

Under the city's charter, the Law Department is an independent agency and the counsel has the right to act "to remedy a charter violation," Mr. Noseda said.

In effect, he said, it was no different than the city pursuing people who did not pay their taxes. The mayor and council do not rule on those matters either.

But Mr. Collette said that position effectively gives the corporation counsel veto power over contracts.

A corporation counsel cannot have the ability the make decisions on suing, Mr. Collette said. That has to be the function of the mayor and council.

Most of the people watching the hearing were reporters, but a small busload of city residents was present and clearly unhappy with the ruling. As reporters spoke to the attorneys afterwards, one woman shouted out that Mr. Collette had "ruled against the people."

In his press conference, Mr. Bing said the city would make the $34 million bond payment as required Friday under a complex financing deal with the state that prevented the city from running out of cash in April and the Financial Advisory Board would hold its first meeting that same day at Cobo Center. The Detroit City Council has yet to appoint its two members to the board, but Councilmember Ken Cockrel Jr. said via his Twitter account he expected that to happen shortly. Mr. Bing said even if the council has not appointed its members, the board would still meet.

Mr. Bing said he held no personal animus toward Ms. Crittendon, saying she did what she thought was right.

"I am hopeful that all of us from a leadership standpoint here in this city can put this behind us and start concentrating and focusing on the work that needs to be done to bring our city back," he said.

House Panel Blocks Bridge Spending; Bridge Co. Attacks Pending N.I.T.C. Deal

A negative supplemental appropriation approved Wednesday morning by the House Appropriations Committee would now also block state spending on the expected interlocal agreement to build the New International Trade Crossing bridge.

The agreement is expected to include the Michigan Strategic Fund as a partner in the bridge, and the amendment adopted to { HYPERLINK "http://www.gongwer.com/index.cfm?link=legislation_billdetail.cfm&billid=2011SB87101" }{ HYPERLINK "http://www.gongwer.com/index.cfm?link=legislation_querymanager.cfm&billid=2011SB87101" } would prevent any spending from the Strategic Fund on the bridge construction.

offered language to stop spending on New International Trade Crossing.

The amendment blocks spending of "state appropriations" on the bridge, which { HYPERLINK "http://www.gongwer.com/index.cfm?link=bio.cfm&nameid=175101&locid=1" } (R-Grandville), sponsor of the amendment, said would block any spending except potentially the tribal casino revenues in the Strategic Fund.

The money from the casinos is "a different animal," Mr. Agema said, and it would likely fall to the attorney general to decide if the amendment covers it.

The Strategic Fund would also be blocked, under the amendment, from entering into a contract regarding the bridge. Mr. Agema said it would again be up to the attorney general to determine if an interlocal agreement would be considered a contract under the language.

But he said his goal was not to block the bridge. "My goal is to stop spending money we didn't authorize," he said.

As to whether the language could block the agreement expected to be announced Friday, he said, "If it derails it, then it shouldn't have been entered into in the first place."

Sara Wurfel, press secretary for { HYPERLINK "http://www.gongwer.com/index.cfm?link=bio.cfm&nameid=245801&locid=1" }, said the new language was no different from past appropriations language on the bridge project.

"We've been clear all along that Michigan taxpayers would not pay for this bridge." Ms. Wurfel said. "There has been no additional money added to or appropriated for the bridge in the new budget. And no MSF funds would be used either. Period."

The bill moves a variety of funds, but overall cuts $259.66 million gross, $168.85 million general fund from the current year budget.

The largest change is $208.6 million ($105.33 million GF) cut from the Department of Community Health. Another $85.45 million ($75.73 million GF) is cut from the Department of Human Services.

The cuts reflect recent Revenue Estimating Conference projections of cash assistance and Medicaid caseloads.

The bill also replaces $4.2 million, all general fund, that was expected as savings from privatizing residential care aides at the Grand Rapids Veterans Home. The move is currently being challenged in court.

The panel dropped plans, approved by the Senate, to use $15 million general fund through the Strategic Fund to cover origination fees under the Agriculture Disaster Loan Program.

The committee also dropped $2.15 million ($1.85 million GF) to restore payments in lieu of taxes through the Department of Treasury.

The House included $50,000 to cover the potential costs of an appeal of the state's redistricting, but, under an amendment offered by { HYPERLINK "http://www.gongwer.com/index.cfm?link=bio.cfm&nameid=31101&locid=1" } (D-Detroit) that divided the Republican caucus, the money would have to be returned to the general fund if the appeal is not filed (as Mr. Durhal expected it would not be) rather than being left in the department to be put to other use.

The bill was reported 22-0 with four members abstaining.

Meanwhile, owners of the Ambassador Bridge are showing no signs of doubt about their effort to amend the Constitution barring new international border crossings from being constructed without a statewide public vote even as an expected announcement Friday on a new bridge connecting Detroit and Windsor, Ontario, looms.

In a post on the website of The People Should Decide, the committee supporting the ballot proposal, backers of the effort said they would keep fighting and that any announcement Friday is meaningless.

"The governor said he plans to announce a 'deal' with Prime Minister Harper of Canada," the statement says. "Please note how hard he is trying to show by this announcement that his new Bridge deal is 'finalized,' and that the 'construction of the government bridge is underway.' Nothing could be further from the truth! You may ask ...what does this mean for our petition drive? The answer is simple... NOTHING - as a vote of the people trumps the intentions of a single bureaucrat."

Manuel "Matty" Moroun, the owner of the Ambassador, will need to collect more than 322,000 petition signatures before July 9 to get his proposal on the ballot. He is funding an unusual television advertising campaign urging voters to sign petitions. Those ads also serve the dual purpose of continuing to turn public opinion against the proposed new bridge.

"Remember the announcement by Gov. Snyder is nothing more than a political move of desperation," the website posting says. "His objective is to prevent the petitions from being completed because they will force Gov. Snyder to listen to the people of Michigan!"

Ms. Wurfel said she had no information to offer on the status of the bridge.

As Gongwer News Service reported Tuesday, Mr. Snyder and Canadian Prime Minister Stephen Harper are expected to formally sign an interlocal agreement to set up an authority that would oversee the construction of the new bridge.

Senate Slows Pace on Detroit Lighting Authority Bills

Although it was slated to be voted on Wednesday, the Senate opted to wait on two bills that would establish a lighting authority for various municipalities, most notably Detroit, as well as a funding mechanism for that authority.

"We've got some people asking questions about it, what the board make-up is (for example)," Senate { HYPERLINK "http://www.gongwer.com/index.cfm?link=bio.cfm&nameid=55701&locid=1" } (R-Monroe) told reporters after session adjourned. "If they're all appointed by the mayor of Detroit, is that okay or is that not okay? Should the Legislature and/or governor have some input into this too since we're approving it? Some of the monies in that city (Detroit) have disappeared or are not being treated with the kind of respect that I think we treat it with up here, so maybe we should just have somebody there."

Though the bills are not necessarily Detroit-centric, the city would greatly benefit from them given that their utilities pay a tax, and part of that revenue - about $12.5 million - would have to go toward funding Lighting Board activities such as replacing or installing new lighting throughout the city.

Currently the legislation ({ HYPERLINK "http://www.gongwer.com/index.cfm?link=legislation_billdetail.cfm&billid=2011HB568801" }{ HYPERLINK "http://www.gongwer.com/index.cfm?link=legislation_querymanager.cfm&billid=2011HB568801" }) calls for a five-member board to be appointed by the city's mayor and to be include professionals such as an engineer, lawyer and accountant.

"One suggestion was maybe you go from five members to eight members (on the board) with the governor, the speaker, and the majority leader appointing someone so that the Legislature and the administration has a look at it, maybe only in certain-size cities or something like that," Mr. Richardville said of discussions within the caucus.

But another Republican senator, speaking on the condition of anonymity, said that the caucus also has some concerns that it doesn't have as much support from Senate Democrats as the GOP expects. Consequently, the bills - which also include { HYPERLINK "http://www.gongwer.com/index.cfm?link=legislation_billdetail.cfm&billid=2011HB570501" }{ HYPERLINK "http://www.gongwer.com/index.cfm?link=legislation_querymanager.cfm&billid=2011HB570501" } - would stand less of a chance of passing if they could not garner support from senators within those communities.

Mr. Richardville said he is hopeful that the Senate can take another crack at the legislation on its last day before summer recess tomorrow. If not, he again emphasized the next day the Senate is supposed to meet on July 18 as one that will be consumed with high-priority items such as these bills.

DETROIT INCOME TAX: The Senate also did not vote on { HYPERLINK "http://www.gongwer.com/index.cfm?link=legislation_billdetail.cfm&billid=2011SB97001" }{ HYPERLINK "http://www.gongwer.com/index.cfm?link=legislation_querymanager.cfm&billid=2011SB97001" }, a bill that would freeze the city's income tax rate at 2.5 percent for residents and 1.25 percent for non-residents (subscribers please note: a story in some editions of the Tuesday Michigan Report inaccurately described the impact of the bill on the city's income tax rate).

Unemployment Rate Rises For First Time In A Year

{ HYPERLINK "http://www.gongwer.com/index.cfm?link=bio.cfm&nameid=245801&locid=1" } and legislative Republicans have touted the steady decline in Michigan's unemployment rate for the past year as evidence their policies are working, but the state announced Wednesday the first uptick in unemployment since May 2011.

The state's unemployment rate edged up to 8.5 percent in May from 8.3 percent in April.

"Michigan's labor market in May and throughout early 2012 has been stable," said Rick Waclawek, director of the Bureau of Labor Market Information and Strategic Initiatives, in a statement. "The minor upturn in the state's jobless rate in May was partially due to individuals entering or re-entering the workforce looking for jobs."

Employment fell from April by 2,000 although it is still up 94,000 for the year. Unemployment rose by 6,000, but is still down 98,000 for the year.

In previous months, as the rate plummeted, Mr. Snyder would announce the new rate on his social media accounts prior to the release from DTMB. That was not the case this time. Democrats jumped all over the governor and legislative Republicans on the issue.

"We're seeing unemployment rise for the first time in a year, and the only place Lansing Republicans can look is in the mirror," said Zack Pohl, executive director of Progress Michigan. "A massive tax cut for big corporations was passed under the veil of job creation, but instead of creating more and better jobs, greedy CEOs are pocketing the profits."

Senate Democratic spokesperson Bob McCann said in a Twitter account post, "I assume @onetoughnerd will be taking responsibility for the rise in unemployment after doing same for recent small dips in it."

Job cuts were recorded in manufacturing (-4,000) and professional and business services (-3,000) while job gains were posted in financial activities (3,000), and trade, transportation, and utilities (3,000).

The state's largest region, the Detroit-Warren-Livonia metropolitan statistical area, saw its unemployment rate rise from 9.2 percent to 9.6 percent.

Despite the decline, the labor statistics bureau noted that the statewide job count for May was the same as the average for the first five months of the year.

Snyder press secretary Sara Wurfel disputed the contention from Democrats that the numbers show signs of trouble in the state's economic recovery.

"There are so many other signs that show that Michigan is in fact headed in the right direction," she said. "As an example right today we have a national economic gardening conference today right in Michigan and the excitement and enthusiasm for Michigan today was apparent."

Senate Clears Election Reform Package

The Senate passed several bills that will modify campaign finance laws and protect the integrity of elections, { HYPERLINK "http://www.gongwer.com/index.cfm?link=bio.cfm&nameid=52301&locid=1" } said on Wednesday.

"I think it's really important because we want to encourage as many people as we can to register and to vote," she said, speaking with reporters during the session. "But we also need to protect the integrity in the system and that's why we call it our safe package for secure and fair elections."

{ INCLUDEPICTURE \d "http://www.gongwer.com/members/ruthjohnsonphoto.jpg" \y * MERGEFORMATINET }

{ HYPERLINK "http://www.gongwer.com/index.cfm?link=bio.cfm&nameid=52301&locid=1" } spoke in support of the election reform package that cleared the Senate on Wednesday.

One of the bills, { HYPERLINK "http://www.gongwer.com/index.cfm?link=legislation_billdetail.cfm&billid=2011HB505801" }{ HYPERLINK "http://www.gongwer.com/index.cfm?link=legislation_querymanager.cfm&billid=2011HB505801" }, which would prohibit a candidate committee from spending campaign funds on personal legal battles, passed unanimously. Another bill, { HYPERLINK "http://www.gongwer.com/index.cfm?link=legislation_billdetail.cfm&billid=2011HB505901" }{ HYPERLINK "http://www.gongwer.com/index.cfm?link=legislation_querymanager.cfm&billid=2011HB505901" } modifies ballot questions and political party committee filing requirements. { HYPERLINK "http://www.gongwer.com/index.cfm?link=bio.cfm&nameid=251401&locid=1" } (R-Canton Township) was the only senator to vote against the bill earning a 36-1 vote.

A bill requiring photo identification to obtain an absentee ballot ({ HYPERLINK "http://www.gongwer.com/index.cfm?link=legislation_billdetail.cfm&billid=2011HB506101" }{ HYPERLINK "http://www.gongwer.com/index.cfm?link=legislation_querymanager.cfm&billid=2011HB506101" }), in addition to other provisions, cleared the Senate on a 26-11 party line vote.

"Recently the auditor general said we had 1,500 people, of the small number that they checked, that were either dead or in prison that had voted," Ms. Johnson continued on the package. "I think they're clerical errors, but again, it shows vulnerability in the system. We've also had the Department of Justice tell us they have far too many people registered to vote in 20 counties because not that many people live there. So we know we have vulnerabilities, and we know that if we have a good, Qualified Voter File, we're going to have good elections."

Some opponents have alleged the legislation amounts to "voter suppression," but Ms. Johnson dismissed the allegations as partisan politics.

"To tell you the truth, it's either partisan theatrics, drama, or they don't understand the bills," she said of the allegations. "Everything in there is to encourage people to vote. Everything that we're doing makes it convenient to vote."

Ms. Johnson said 99.5 percent of eligible voters in the state have some form of identification and that the 0.5 percent that may not were considered in the provision in HB 5061 that permits a voter to sign an affidavit assuring his or her identity.

The Senate also passed { HYPERLINK "http://www.gongwer.com/index.cfm?link=legislation_billdetail.cfm&billid=2011HB506201" }{ HYPERLINK "http://www.gongwer.com/index.cfm?link=legislation_querymanager.cfm&billid=2011HB506201" } on a 36-1 vote, with { HYPERLINK "http://www.gongwer.com/index.cfm?link=bio.cfm&nameid=161201&locid=1" } (D-Detroit) voting against the bill that calls for those who solicit people to register to vote to go through a training program first.

"This is widely supported by local clerks, both Democrats and Republicans," Ms. Johnson said. "What it is, is a 15-20 minute educational process for one person from the organization who will go back and spread the word."

Similar legislation in the Senate that would make multiple changes to election law did not fare as well, however.

The Senate concurred in House changes to { HYPERLINK "http://www.gongwer.com/index.cfm?link=legislation_billdetail.cfm&billid=2011SB75101" }{ HYPERLINK "http://www.gongwer.com/index.cfm?link=legislation_querymanager.cfm&billid=2011SB75101" }, { HYPERLINK "http://www.gongwer.com/index.cfm?link=legislation_billdetail.cfm&billid=2011SB75401" }{ HYPERLINK "http://www.gongwer.com/index.cfm?link=legislation_querymanager.cfm&billid=2011SB75401" }, { HYPERLINK "http://www.gongwer.com/index.cfm?link=legislation_billdetail.cfm&billid=2011SB80301" }{ HYPERLINK "http://www.gongwer.com/index.cfm?link=legislation_querymanager.cfm&billid=2011SB80301" }, { HYPERLINK "http://www.gongwer.com/index.cfm?link=legislation_billdetail.cfm&billid=2011SB82301" }{ HYPERLINK

"http://www.gongwer.com/index.cfm?link=legislation_querymanager.cfm&billid=2011SB82301" }, { HYPERLINK "http://www.gongwer.com/index.cfm?link=legislation_billdetail.cfm&billid=2011SB82401" }{ HYPERLINK "http://www.gongwer.com/index.cfm?link=legislation_querymanager.cfm&billid=2011SB82401" } and { HYPERLINK "http://www.gongwer.com/index.cfm?link=legislation_billdetail.cfm&billid=2011SB82501" }{ HYPERLINK "http://www.gongwer.com/index.cfm?link=legislation_querymanager.cfm&billid=2011SB82501" } on a 26-11 party-line vote with those bills now headed to { HYPERLINK "http://www.gongwer.com/index.cfm?link=bio.cfm&nameid=245801&locid=1" }. But { HYPERLINK "http://www.gongwer.com/index.cfm?link=legislation_billdetail.cfm&billid=2011HB529701" }{ HYPERLINK "http://www.gongwer.com/index.cfm?link=legislation_querymanager.cfm&billid=2011HB529701" }, { HYPERLINK "http://www.gongwer.com/index.cfm?link=legislation_billdetail.cfm&billid=2011SB75201" }{ HYPERLINK "http://www.gongwer.com/index.cfm?link=legislation_querymanager.cfm&billid=2011SB75201" } and { HYPERLINK "http://www.gongwer.com/index.cfm?link=legislation_billdetail.cfm&billid=2011SB75301" }{ HYPERLINK "http://www.gongwer.com/index.cfm?link=legislation_querymanager.cfm&billid=2011SB75301" }, also part of the package, received unanimous support 37-0. Senate { HYPERLINK "http://www.gongwer.com/index.cfm?link=bio.cfm&nameid=60101&locid=1" } (D-East Lansing) was absent from the afternoon session in which the Senate voted on these bills.

Senate Finance Moves Income Tax Reduction, Exemption Bills

House bills that would speed up an income tax rate reduction and increase the personal exemption from $3,700 to $3,950 were reported Wednesday from the Senate Finance Committee.

But the bills ({ HYPERLINK "http://www.gongwer.com/index.cfm?link=legislation_billdetail.cfm&billid=2011HB569901" }{ HYPERLINK "http://www.gongwer.com/index.cfm?link=legislation_querymanager.cfm&billid=2011HB569901" } and { HYPERLINK "http://www.gongwer.com/index.cfm?link=legislation_billdetail.cfm&billid=2011HB570001" }{ HYPERLINK "http://www.gongwer.com/index.cfm?link=legislation_querymanager.cfm&billid=2011HB570001" }) drew criticism from { HYPERLINK "http://www.gongwer.com/index.cfm?link=bio.cfm&nameid=155301&locid=1" } (D-Ann Arbor). The bill would provide a 0.1 percent cut on an individual's income taxes on October 1, rather than on the currently scheduled January 1.

Ms. Warren questioned the estimated $28 that an individual would end up receiving a year, saying that a single person could "blow through" that kind of money and that perhaps it would be better spent invested in programs that could fund schools, police and fire departments.

"If you want to say that we should take this money and invest it into programs rather than entrusting the taxpayers to invest it as they see fit ... I'm going to strongly disagree with you," shot back { HYPERLINK "http://www.gongwer.com/index.cfm?link=bio.cfm&nameid=292001&locid=1" } (R-Vulcan), the bill sponsor..

The legislation was reported on a 6-1 vote, with Ms. Warren the only senator in objection to it and its counterpart, HB 5700.

That bill would increase the personal exemption from $3,700 per person to $3,950 on October 1. It would then increase by $50 effective January 1, 2014, and rise to $4,100 effective January 1, 2017.

Howard Ryan, the Department of Treasury's legislative liaison, spoke in support of both the bills.

"We are very much in support of the bill," he said. "We think it's a very fair and efficient way to deal with the tax structure."

Land Purchase Cap Headed To Snyder

A bill limiting the amount of land the state can own is on its way to { HYPERLINK "http://www.gongwer.com/index.cfm?link=bio.cfm&nameid=245801&locid=1" } after the House rejected a change from committee that altered a line in the state making a good portion of the bill deal only with the Upper Peninsula.

In the House Natural Resources, Tourism and Outdoor Recreation Committee, an amendment from { HYPERLINK "http://www.gongwer.com/index.cfm?link=bio.cfm&nameid=206201&locid=1" } (R-Traverse City) moved the line from north of the Mason-Arenac line to apply just to the UP, without altering the amount of land in that portion of the cap.

The House restored the language dealing with the line on Wednesday and the Senate concurred with the changes to { HYPERLINK "http://www.gongwer.com/index.cfm?link=legislation_billdetail.cfm&billid=2011SB24801" }{ HYPERLINK "http://www.gongwer.com/index.cfm?link=legislation_querymanager.cfm&billid=2011SB24801" }. It restricts the state to owning no more than 3.91 million acres of land in that portion.

It passed the House on a 58-52 vote and cleared the Senate 24-12.

Also as part of the bill, the Department of Natural Resources is tasked with developing a land acquisition plan for each region of the state by October 1, 2014. It must then be approved by both the House and Senate. If that is accomplished, the bill states the intent is for the cap to then be removed, but if not, the cap stays in place.

Sara Wurfel, Mr. Snyder's press secretary, said the administration had been working hard with legislators to finalize an agreement.

"The governor thinks it's very important that we have to be good fiscal stewards of our land," she said.

MARRIAGE BILLS: The House unanimously passed a three-bill package that will allow local judges and magistrates to perform marriage ceremonies outside their home county.

The Senate unanimously passed the bills ({ HYPERLINK "http://www.gongwer.com/index.cfm?link=legislation_billdetail.cfm&billid=2011SB69801" }{ HYPERLINK "http://www.gongwer.com/index.cfm?link=legislation_querymanager.cfm&billid=2011SB69801" }, { HYPERLINK "http://www.gongwer.com/index.cfm?link=legislation_billdetail.cfm&billid=2011SB69901" }{ HYPERLINK "http://www.gongwer.com/index.cfm?link=legislation_querymanager.cfm&billid=2011SB69901" } and { HYPERLINK "http://www.gongwer.com/index.cfm?link=legislation_billdetail.cfm&billid=2011SB70001" }{ HYPERLINK "http://www.gongwer.com/index.cfm?link=legislation_querymanager.cfm&billid=2011SB70001" }) in January.

The practice is allowed now, but only if the official seeks approval from the State Court Administrative Office.

Liquor License At Big House, 911 Fee Get Senate Stamp Of Approval

When it was not caucusing or recessing for committee meetings, the Senate approved numerous pieces of legislation on Wednesday, including granting the University of Michigan the ability to sell liquor at the Winter Classic hockey game it will host next year at Michigan Stadium.

The Senate also approved a bill that will force users of prepaid wireless phones to pay a 911 fee when purchasing their phones and any future minutes for it.

Previously the cost was charged at the wholesale level and customers then paid sales tax at the retail level, but now both will be paid at the retail level, { HYPERLINK "http://www.gongwer.com/index.cfm?link=bio.cfm&nameid=282201&locid=1" } (R-Lawton), the bill's sponsor, has said (See { HYPERLINK "http://www.gongwer.com/index.cfm?link=news.cfm&article_id=51085" }).

BRIDGE CARD REQUIREMENTS: Two pieces of legislation that tack on additional Bridge Card regulations cleared the Senate on Wednesday as well.

"The whole issue of lost or stolen Bridge Cards is already in effect," said { HYPERLINK "http://www.gongwer.com/index.cfm?link=bio.cfm&nameid=209301&locid=1" } (D-Southfield). "The Department of Human Services deemed that they had the authority to implement this program some time ago, so it is already in effect. What this bill would do is it would put it into statute. My opposition to this is that if it is in statute, just as the department put it into effect, if they say this is not working or there is a better way of doing this, then now you can't do that. You must come back to the Legislature and have us vote to take it back out of statute again."

The Senate also ordered enrolled { HYPERLINK "http://www.gongwer.com/index.cfm?link=legislation_billdetail.cfm&billid=2011SB10901" }{ HYPERLINK "http://www.gongwer.com/index.cfm?link=legislation_querymanager.cfm&billid=2011SB10901" }, which would prohibit the use of Bridge Cards in casino ATMs.

"Cash assistance should be temporary and only for basic needs - not blackjack and booze," { HYPERLINK "http://www.gongwer.com/index.cfm?link=bio.cfm&nameid=82701&locid=1" } (R-Grand Ledge), sponsor of the bill, said in a statement. "My measure is one of many that have been passed by the Legislature that will ensure assistance goes only to those who truly need it, not those who want to gamble away taxpayers' hard earned money."

HOME VISITATION: The Senate also passed { HYPERLINK "http://www.gongwer.com/index.cfm?link=legislation_billdetail.cfm&billid=2011HB557201" }{ HYPERLINK "http://www.gongwer.com/index.cfm?link=legislation_querymanager.cfm&billid=2011HB557201" }, a bill that would require home visiting service providers to use evidence-based or promising program models to continue receiving state funding.

"We are thrilled that the House and Senate have approved this measure that will make such a positive impact on the lives of many Michigan children and families," Amy Zaagman, director of the Michigan Council for Maternal and Child Health, said in a statement. "We look forward to Governor Snyder signing the legislation soon."

The bill was passed unanimously, 37-0, with { HYPERLINK "http://www.gongwer.com/index.cfm?link=bio.cfm&nameid=161801&locid=1" } (D-Highland Park) absent at the time of voting.

{ HYPERLINK "http://www.gongwer.com/index.cfm?link=bio.cfm&nameid=284201&locid=1" } (R-Alto) sponsored the legislation and also issued a statement upon final passage of the bill.

"By improving the lives of Michigan's most high-risk families, home visiting models benefit children, parents and the community as a whole," she said.

The legislation returns to the House for concurrence before going to { HYPERLINK "http://www.gongwer.com/index.cfm?link=bio.cfm&nameid=245801&locid=1" }.

Capital Outlay Supplemental On Its Way To The Governor

A bill that would provide $613.1 million for 18 infrastructure projects at nine public universities and nine community colleges passed in the Senate on Wednesday after a near unanimous vote.

The projects were not included in the current year budget but had already been given initial approval by the Legislature (See { HYPERLINK "http://www.gongwer.com/index.cfm?link=news.cfm&article_id=51111" }).The state's share of the bill will be $304.5 million while universities and community colleges will chip in $308.7 million.

The bill ({ HYPERLINK "http://www.gongwer.com/index.cfm?link=legislation_billdetail.cfm&billid=2011HB554101" }{ HYPERLINK "http://www.gongwer.com/index.cfm?link=legislation_querymanager.cfm&billid=2011HB5541 01" }) ultimately cleared on a 36-1 vote, as Senate { HYPERLINK "http://www.gongwer.com/index.cfm?link=bio.cfm&nameid=60101&locid=1" } (D-East Lansing) was absent from the afternoon session in which voting took place and { HYPERLINK "http://www.gongwer.com/index.cfm?link=bio.cfm&nameid=52901&locid=1" } (R-Hamburg) voted no.

The bill is identical to the recommendations by { HYPERLINK "http://www.gongwer.com/index.cfm?link=bio.cfm&nameid=245801&locid=1" }, but it does not include boilerplate language relating to reform of the capital outlay process as he had requested.

Natural Resources Trust Fund Debate Lingers

The conference committee on { HYPERLINK "http://www.gongwer.com/index.cfm?link=legislation_billdetail.cfm&billid=2011HB536401" }{ HYPERLINK "http://www.gongwer.com/index.cfm?link=legislation_querymanager.cfm&billid=2011HB536401" }, which will discuss a supplemental to the current year budget, left some scratching their heads when they noticed a meeting for Wednesday night and moved it instead to tomorrow morning.

{ HYPERLINK "http://www.gongwer.com/index.cfm?link=bio.cfm&nameid=95101&locid=1" } (R-Evart) could only say that he had heard through second-hand sources that an agreement on the supplemental (HB 5364) had been reached but as the day went on the deal was less certain.

The Senate did not fund four projects that the House had passed. Those projects would have enabled the Department of Natural Resources to purchase privately owned land otherwise surrounded by current DNR property.

Poll Finds Mixed Feelings On E.M.s In 4 Cities

A survey commissioned by Business Leaders for Michigan shows that voters in the four cities run by emergency managers disapprove of how those managers are running their community, but also think the managers have done a better job than previous elected city leadership.

The survey, conducted by Glengariff Group, asked 200 registered voters each in Benton Harbor, Ecorse, Flint and Pontiac. When assessing the results of all 800 respondents combined, the poll showed 31.4 percent approve of the job performance of their emergency manager while 47.8 percent disapprove.

Respondents also said services had not improved in the past year in their city. Just 13.6 percent said they had improved while 39 percent said they had worsened and another 43 percent said they stayed the same.

But there was some optimism among voters in these four troubled cities.

Some 41.5 percent said they expected conditions in their city to improve in the next year compared to 19.4 percent who said conditions would degrade and 30.5 percent who said they would stay the same.

And when asked who had done a better job managing the city budget, 42 percent said the emergency manager while 19.3 percent said the city council. Some 17.1 percent said neither and another 18.4 percent said they did not know.

In looking at the city-by-city results, it appears emergency managers in Benton Harbor and Ecorse are getting better reviews than those in Flint and Pontiac.

In Benton Harbor, the emergency manager has a 37.5 percent job approval rating compared to 40 percent negative. In Ecorse, 41.5 percent approve of the emergency manager's job performance compared to 38 percent disapprove.

But managers have gotten hostile receptions in Flint and Pontiac. In Flint, just 24 percent approve of the manager's job performance compared to 58 percent who disapprove. And in Pontiac, 22.5 percent approve of the manager while 56 percent disapprove.

However, even in Flint and Pontiac, the manager was given better ratings than the council on handling the budget although those numbers were within the margin of error in Pontiac.

"While the residents of the four cities with emergency managers may not like having an EM, the majority of residents in every case are optimistic about their city's future," said Doug Rothwell, president and CEO of Business Leaders for Michigan, in a statement. "In fact, residents in these communities overwhelmingly believe that their city budget is better managed under the EM than by their city council."

The overall survey has a margin of error of plus or minus 3.5 percentage points. The survey results for each individual city have a margin of error of plus or minus 6.8 percentage points.

Senate Committee Discusses Labor Strike Penalty Bills

Public employees would be fined one day's salary for participating in an illegal strike under legislation considered Wednesday by a Senate committee.

{ HYPERLINK "http://www.gongwer.com/index.cfm?link=legislation_billdetail.cfm&billid=2011SB70401" }{

HYPERLINK "http://www.gongwer.com/index.cfm?link=legislation_querymanager.cfm&billid=2011SB70401" } would mandate that a person who violated the prohibitions against preventing lawful work by mass picketing or obstructing the entrance to a place of employment, among others actions, be subject to a civil fine of $1,000 per day. A civil fine of $10,000 would be subject to a union or organization that sponsored or assisted in the prohibited activity.

Under { HYPERLINK "http://www.gongwer.com/index.cfm?link=legislation_billdetail.cfm&billid=2011SB116101" }{ HYPERLINK "http://www.gongwer.com/index.cfm?link=legislation_querymanager.cfm&billid=2011SB116101" } potential employees taking the place of striking workers would not be notified with the fact they are replacing people who are on strike.

The Senate Reforms, Restructuring, and Reinventing Committee heard testimony on the legislation.

{ HYPERLINK "http://www.gongwer.com/index.cfm?link=bio.cfm&nameid=102801&locid=1" } (R-St. Joseph), sponsor of SB 1161, said for 50 years the notice of strike legislation hasn't changed and has become antiquated.

Wendy Block, director of Health Policy and Human Resources at the Michigan Chamber of Commerce, supports the bills. "The bills have a common thread: to make Michigan's labor laws more competitive and protect job providers and employees alike in our labor environment," she said.

She said a state's labor environment is an important factor that companies considered when they open a branch or relocate their companies.

She also said the bills are important because they would empower employers to seek legal remedies and relief, as well as provide a stronger deterrent to the laws that already make various strikes illegal.

{ HYPERLINK "http://www.gongwer.com/index.cfm?link=bio.cfm&nameid=155301&locid=1" } (D-Ann Arbor) said prospective employees have the right to know whether they are replacing striking workers. For example, she said if workers are striking because their employer is not covering a particular benefit, the new workers should know.

Ms. Block said the requirement of a strike notice is unique to Michigan and could have a "chilling impact" on people who might apply for an open position. She said it would not impact future employees because "the employer has made the difficult decision to move forward and start a clean slate."

Charlie Owens, state director for the National Federation of Independent Business, said the bills are necessary, because" it's difficult, expensive, and time consuming to penalize illegally striking employees as the current law is now constructed."

Due to time constraints, opponents to the bills did not get the chance to testify, but people from American Civil Liberties Union of Michigan and United Auto Workers Local 6000 wanted to oppose the bills, and their testimony might be continued next week.

Ray Holman of UAW Local 6000 said in a post from his Twitter account that fining workers $1,000 a day for striking is wrong.

Stallworth Pushes Standards For Consent Agreements

Consent agreements to resolve financial emergencies for local governments would have to include set performance measures and an explicit end date under legislation introduced Wednesday by { HYPERLINK "http://www.gongwer.com/index.cfm?link=bio.cfm&nameid=97101&locid=1" }.

Mr. Stallworth (D-Detroit) said the accountability being required of local governments is not being applied to communities operating under consent agreements.

Rep. Thomas Stallworth has introduced legislation to guide future consent agreements with financially struggling local governments.

"The issues with the consent agreement in Detroit have been appalling," Mr. Stallworth said. "We can't expect Detroit to survive and thrive without some credible process for permanence."

The goal is to create agreements that will improve the operations of communities in distress, said House { HYPERLINK "http://www.gongwer.com/index.cfm?link=bio.cfm&nameid=230301&locid=1" } (D-Battle Creek).

"Our communities have to emerge from a consent agreement better off than they were," Ms. Segal said.

While the legislation would allow the agreement to be amended, Mr. Stallworth said it was essential that it have an end date, a point at which the community's fiscal emergency is expected to be resolved.

The agreement also would have to include milestones for the manager to meet to show the plans in the agreement are working, Mr. Stallworth said.

And, as long as the agreement is in effect, residents should also know what are considered core services and what will be done to guarantee they are delivered, he said. The agreement would have to define those core services

If the milestones and goals are not being met, there also needs to be consequences for the manager, Ms. Segal said.

Mr. Stallworth said the current plan for Detroit has none of those elements. "What we've experienced going forward is an uncertain, unclear and undefined plan that many feel was coerced," he said.

The plan would not require the Detroit agreement be rewritten, but he said he hoped the leadership there would follow the accountability requirements in the bill anyway.

Mr. Stallworth said he currently has full support of the Detroit Caucus and many other members of the Democratic Caucus, but said he had not yet attracted any support from Republicans for the proposal.

Audit Calls For Improvements In 401(k) Controls

Financial controls over Michigan's 401(k) program need substantial improvements to prevent misstating values in the fund, a financial audit of the program released on Wednesday said.

The { HYPERLINK "http://www.audgen.michigan.gov/finalpdfs/11_12/r071015612.pdf" \t "blank" } found that the lack of controls caused the fund to understate the value of its mutual fund investments in the 2010-11 fiscal year by $184.5 million and to overstate the value of common trust funds by the same $184.5 million.

The audit said these mistakes and others were brought to the attention of the fund, and substantial corrections were made.

The audit, which looked at the fund for the 2009-10 and 2010-11 fiscal years, recommended improvements be made to prevent similar mistakes in the future.

The Department of Technology, Management and Budget, which oversees the plan, agreed with the finding, though it said there had been substantial improvements in the statement preparation procedure and process.

The 401(k) plan for the state was established in the mid-1980s. However, beginning in 1997 all newly hired state workers had to participate in the plan instead of being part of the state's pension system.

The total investments for the fund has been widely varied over the last several years, as the stock markets have gone through wide swings, and as the state has changed some retirement rules.

At the end of the 2010 fiscal year, the fund was up by $314.6 million to a total of nearly $3.1 billion. But with the market turmoil that occurred in August and September 2011 following the fight over raising the U.S. debt ceiling, and the fact that the state created an early retirement program for state workers, the fund was down by some $68 million to $2.996 billion at the end of the 2011 fiscal year.

D.N.R. Cited For Land Acquisition, Disposal Practices

The Department of Natural Resources is not always purchasing and selling land in ways that enhances its mission, and is not adequately melding former correctional facilities back into its recreation programs, a report released Wednesday by Auditor General Thomas McTavish said.

The { HYPERLINK "http://www.audgen.michigan.gov/finalpdfs/11_12/r751015511.pdf" \t "blank" } of the DNR's real estate acquisition, disposition and land holding program, for the period October 2008 through August 2011, found that, as of the end that period, the DNR still held 55.3 percent of the acreage it had determined was non-essential in its review process that began in March 2005.

And, while the DNR had argued it was less costly to hold some of the parcels than sell them, auditors said the department had not conducted a cost-benefit analysis to support that assertion.

Auditors said 2,413 acres of the 9,390 acres would have been appropriate to send to the Land Bank Fast Track Authority.

The department is also still holding six former correctional facilities, including Camp Baraga that was abandoned in 1991, where it has not demolished buildings to meld the lands back into neighboring recreation areas.

"We visited the vacated Camp Waterloo and Camp Brighton correctional facilities and noted significant deterioration, vandalism, fire damage, open entry points in the fence surrounding the correctional facilities, and paperwork strewn about unsecured outbuildings," the report said. "Without appropriate restoration, the State-owned lands that these correctional facilities reside on do not align with DNR's mission and initiatives for natural resources conservation or outdoor recreation opportunities."

Noting that there were formal agreements with the Department of Corrections on some of the facilities requiring that it be responsible for maintaining or demolishing the buildings, auditors recommended that DNR work with Corrections, the Department of Technology, Management and Budget and the Executive Office to have the buildings removed.

But the auditors said the DNR's overall administration of land purchases and sales was effective.

Schuette: Law Allows Local Fireworks Sales Regulation

As long as a local ordinance does not prohibit sales of fireworks, local governments can regulate those sellers, { HYPERLINK

"http://www.gongwer.com/index.cfm?link=bio.cfm&nameid=77201&locid=1" } said in an opinion released Wednesday.

{ HYPERLINK "http://www.gongwer.com/index.cfm?link=bio.cfm&nameid=82701&locid=1" } (R-Grand Ledge) asked the question on behalf of a township that has an ordinance requiring temporary vendors using sales tents to register, for a fee, with the township and allow fire department inspections of the facility. He wondered whether the ordinance conflicted with the statute.

Mr. Schuette said ({ HYPERLINK "http://www.ag.state.mi.us/opinion/datafiles/2010s/op10345.htm" \t "blank" }) the township can enforce the ordinance, and the fee, because they are not targeted specifically at fireworks and would not serve to prohibit sales.

"Its requirements regarding a permit, inspection, and payment of a fee before vendors may sell out of a temporary facility do not run afoul of the Act," he said. "Further, these local requirements are in addition to the requirements found in the Act since the ordinance requires that the vendor be 'in compliance with all applicable laws.' Thus, the terms of the ordinance and the Act may each be fully implemented."

D.N.R. Selling Fire-Damaged Timber

With the Duck Lake fire now completely contained, Department of Natural Resources officials announced Wednesday that they would sell some of the timber damaged in the blaze.

The sale will not only clear some trees felled during the fire, but will also help to prevent insect infestations and other damage to remaining trees, officials said.

Companies interested in purchasing the timber will have one week to review the fire zone and make a bid. Currently, most of the timber is red pine and jack pine, but further assessments could change that makeup.

The sale is scheduled for June 22 at 10 a.m. at the Newberry Field Office, 5100 State Highway M-123, Newberry.

Committee Roundup

PETITION BILL: The Senate Local Government and Elections Committee heard testimony Wednesday on requiring a ballot question petition to indicate whether an individual was being compensated to circulate it.

Specifically, if an individual were receiving compensation for circulating a petition to amend the Constitution, initiate legislation, or initiate a referendum, the petition would have to indicate the fact and the name of the person or organization that provides the compensation.

{ HYPERLINK "http://www.gongwer.com/index.cfm?link=bio.cfm&nameid=79201&locid=1" } (R-Sterling Heights), the sponsor of the bill ({ HYPERLINK "http://www.gongwer.com/index.cfm?link=legislation_billdetail.cfm&billid=2011SB8801" }), said that petition would provide name of individual or organization on the front of the petition in 10-point boldfaced type, and petitions that comply with the requirement would be valid.

Mr. Rocca also said since it is the first draft of the bill, it could see changes.

{ HYPERLINK "http://www.gongwer.com/index.cfm?link=bio.cfm&nameid=54001&locid=1" } (R-Grand Blanc), the chairman of the committee, said he likes the bill because it provides more transparency.

{ HYPERLINK "http://www.gongwer.com/index.cfm?link=bio.cfm&nameid=161201&locid=1" } (D-Detroit) questioned whether the bill would affect this year's petitions. Mr. Rocca said nothing would affect petitions distributed this year.

Mike Batterbee, deputy director in the Department of State's Office of Government Affairs, said the department is neutral on this bill although he stated some concerns. He said it's unclear how the bill would work and circulators have no way of knowing petitioners were being paid or not.

Chris Thomas, director of the Bureau of Elections at the Department of State, expressed similar concerns and said there would be no additional public cost, in response to Mr. Young's question on whether there's significant cost for that.

STOCK SCAM: Hiep The Trinh of Fullerton California was charged Wednesday with 15 different counts related to an alleged scheme to sell shares of a non-existent company.

{ HYPERLINK "http://www.gongwer.com/index.cfm?link=bio.cfm&nameid=77201&locid=1" }, whose department filed the charges, alleged Mr. Trinh used his ties to the Vietnamese community in the state to convince people to buy shares in a technology company called NRG. But the charges allege he merely kept the money.

Mr. Trinh faces a variety of felony fraud charges carrying penalties up to $10,000 and 10 years in prison as well as racketeering, which carries penalties of $100,000 and 20 years.

So-Called Main Street Fairness Bills Stalled By Dems

Bills that would force the collection of the sales and use tax on purchases made through online entities that have affiliations in the state were on the House Tax Policy Committee agenda Wednesday, but were not voted on because House Democrats on the committee were going to abstain from voting.

{ HYPERLINK "http://www.gongwer.com/index.cfm?link=bio.cfm&nameid=268601&locid=1" } (R-Utica), chair of the committee, said he thought the bills ({ HYPERLINK "http://www.gongwer.com/index.cfm?link=legislation_billdetail.cfm&billid=2013HB420201" } and { HYPERLINK "http://www.gongwer.com/index.cfm?link=legislation_billdetail.cfm&billid=2013HB420301" }) had enough votes to be reported from committee. But Mr. Farrington said he found out before the meeting on Wednesday that the Democrats on the committee were planning on abstaining from the vote.

Mr. Farrington said he did not know why the Democrat committee members decided to pass, and he said it could possibly have been for "political reasons."

He also said plans for moving the bills are up in the air, since it does not have the votes to be reported from committee.

{ HYPERLINK "http://www.gongwer.com/index.cfm?link=bio.cfm&nameid=211501&locid=1" } (D-Warren), a member of the committee, said it wasn't a last minute decision and the Democratic members simply feel the issue is a federal one.

Mr. Switalski said the U.S. Senate has passed bills requiring internet retailers to charge the sales and use tax, and he said the U.S. House is "poised" to do so as well.

However, those watching the issue said it seemed Democrats were leveraging their votes in hopes of winning Republican support on other issues.

Officials Announce $4M To Address Backlog Of Detroit Rape Kits

{ HYPERLINK "http://www.gongwer.com/index.cfm?link=bio.cfm&nameid=77201&locid=1" } is making available $4 million from money his office has obtained through legal settlements to pay for processing many of the more than 9,000 remaining abandoned, untested rape kits found in a Detroit Police Department property room almost four years ago.

At a news conference that included { HYPERLINK "http://www.gongwer.com/index.cfm?link=bio.cfm&nameid=245801&locid=1" } and Wayne

County Prosecutor Kym Worthy, officials said they could not be sure exactly how many of the kits could be processed for $4 million, but at an average cost of $1,550 per kit, they were hopeful of making a significant dent in the backlog.

"There are people that have been victims that are in these kits that deserve justice," Mr. Snyder said.

Ms. Worthy undertook a private fundraising effort to process about 1,600 of the original 11,303 kits. Through those tests, and many of the kits were no longer testable, 32 serial rapists were identified, Ms. Worthy said.

She praised Mr. Snyder and Ms. Schuette for their efforts. She said more than 100 rapists could be identified as a result of the funding.

"It's bigger than huge," she said.

Ms. Worthy is in the middle of a well-publicized battle with Wayne County Executive Robert Ficano and the County Commission about the size of her budget. She was asked whether her office had the prosecutors available to handle cases stemming from testing the kits and responded that she hoped county officials were listening to the commitment of Mr. Schuette and Mr. Snyder.

"At times when I don't hear very much good news of a financial nature in Wayne County, it was a great day, a fabulous day, when the attorney general called me and said that he was making available funds that will allow thousands more kits to be tested," she said. "That was better news than manna from heaven."

Ms. Worthy said her office already has obtained convictions, a guilty plea and another four with trial dates set from its work on the kits tested so far.

Mr. Schuette said the effort would hopefully provide some healing or closure for the thousands of women who feel abandoned by law enforcement.

"Rape, it's not just another crime. When a woman is violated, attacked, assaulted, brutalized, it cries out for justice," he said. "Twice, women were violated. Once by the rape and then second that justice was put in a box, put on a shelf. That's going to end now with this team effort."

Peters Leads All Potential Republican U.S. Senate Candidates

Democratic { HYPERLINK "http://www.gongwer.com/index.cfm?link=bio.cfm&nameid=7801&locid=1" } leads all possible Republican candidates for the U.S. Senate race in 2014, according to a new poll released Wednesday, although the firm conducting the poll said it was more of a generic ballot test given the lack of familiarity those surveyed had with the candidates.

The only Republican who has announced a bid is former Secretary of State Terri Land, and she performs the best against Mr. Peters, who still led her 41 percent to 36 percent even though more voters recognized Ms. Land's name than Mr. Peters'.

Mr. Peters scores even better against the Republican many in the GOP are hoping will run, { HYPERLINK "http://www.gongwer.com/index.cfm?link=bio.cfm&nameid=3001&locid=1" } of Brighton. Mr. Peters held a 42 percent to 32 percent lead in that match-up.

Against { HYPERLINK "http://www.gongwer.com/index.cfm?link=bio.cfm&nameid=204901&locid=1" } (R-Kentwood), Mr. Peters held a 42-30 lead.

Other Republicans considering a bid, like state { HYPERLINK "http://www.gongwer.com/index.cfm?link=bio.cfm&nameid=84601&locid=1" } of Saginaw Township and physician Rob Steele, trail Mr. Peters by the same 44-26 margin. Former Republican Party Chair Saul Anuzis was further back at 44-24.

The poll was conducted by Public Policy Polling, a Democratic firm with a good track record for accurate polling in Michigan. Holland Mayor Kurt Dykstra, who says he is considering a bid, was not tested in the survey.

"Peters' strength in these early match-ups has less to do with him than it does the general Democratic lean of the state in national elections," Public Policy Polling said in a memo about the survey.

Eighteen percent of those polled had a favorable opinion of Mr. Peters compared to 16 percent unfavorable, leaving 66 percent with no opinion. Ms. Land, who won statewide office twice, in 2002 and 2006, registered a 29 percent favorable rating and 21 percent unfavorable.

Looking deeper into the poll, there were some encouraging numbers for Ms. Land if she faces competition for the Republican nomination. Forty-two percent of Republicans had a favorable opinion of her compared to 11 percent unfavorable - by far the best spread of any other potential candidate. Mr. Rogers had a split of 27-12 among Republicans, and { HYPERLINK "http://www.gongwer.com/index.cfm?link=bio.cfm&nameid=204901&locid=1" } (R-Kentwood) had an anemic 15 percent favorable to 16 percent unfavorable rating among Republicans.

In a Land-Peters general election match-up, Mr. Peters' five-point edge comes from the greater number of Democrats voting. The two are statistically tied among independents with Ms. Land at 32 percent and Mr. Peters at 31 percent.

The survey was conducted via automated telephone interviews May 30 through June 2 among 697 Michigan voters. It has an error margin of plus or minus 3.7 percentage points. The poll conducted used an oversample of 334 Republicans for a question on whom the party would most like to see as its nominee with opinions varied.

And on that question, there was less enthusiasm for Ms. Land.

Twenty-one percent said they wanted { HYPERLINK "http://www.gongwer.com/index.cfm?link=bio.cfm&nameid=1401&locid=1" } of Midland to run, although he has said he is not running. Eighteen percent named Mr. Rogers, who is considering the contest, while 16 percent chose Mr. Amash, 15 percent Ms. Land, 7 percent Mr. Anuzis, 2 percent Circuit Judge Kimberly Small and Mr. Steele and Mr. Kahn at 1 percent each. The error margin for that question was plus or minus 5.4 percentage points.

Mike Murray, a Republican political consultant, said the poll is a positive for Ms. Land. Mr. Peters spent big money in his three congressional campaigns and has had the field to himself for some time, but she is barely outside the margin of error against him

Mr. Murray, who is not working for anyone in the race, said he was somewhat surprised that Ms. Land fared better against Mr. Peters than Mr. Rogers or Mr. Amash. He noted she will need to raise big money and avoid a bruising primary to position herself.

"I think she stacks up very well with Gary Peters," he said.

Democrats, however, were less than concerned, noting that 85 percent of Republicans suggested they preferred someone other than Ms. Land as their nominee.

Senate Passes Legislation Barring Mandatory Paid Sick Leave

The Senate on Wednesday passed, mostly along party lines, a bill prohibiting local governments from establishing their own laws on employee leave for employers in their jurisdiction, with Democrats calling the bill unnecessary and one of the worst bills they had ever seen.

{ HYPERLINK "http://www.gongwer.com/index.cfm?link=bio.cfm&nameid=155301&locid=1" } (D-Ann Arbor) offered a substitute to { HYPERLINK "http://www.gongwer.com/index.cfm?link=legislation_billdetail.cfm&billid=2013SB17301" } that would essentially undo is the legislation by instead requiring employers to give employees paid sick leave time.

"Paid sick leave policies are good public policy and in fact good for business," Ms. Warren said.

{ HYPERLINK "http://www.gongwer.com/index.cfm?link=bio.cfm&nameid=124401&locid=1" } (R-Gaines Township), sponsor of the legislation, of course urged defeat of the substitute. He referenced his son, who had just started his own business and could barely stay afloat as it was, let alone if he were to be required to pay sick time for his employees.

"I believe leave time benefits, paid or unpaid, is an agreement between employer and employee," Mr. Jansen said.

Ms. Warren said the bill would override local control and that the legislation was "a solution in search of a problem," since to her knowledge only four places in the nation - none of which are in Michigan - have implemented such a policy. She also argued that having paid sick leave helped increase worker performance, boost morale and cut down on health care costs.

Mr. Jansen was joined in support by { HYPERLINK "http://www.gongwer.com/index.cfm?link=bio.cfm&nameid=74701&locid=1" } (R-Escanaba), who said one thing that has been missing from the conversation as the bill relates to local control is the issue of private control. He said the government should not be able to make such a decision and force the burden of cost onto employers.

The substitute was defeated along party lines, and the bill was passed 25-13 with { HYPERLINK "http://www.gongwer.com/index.cfm?link=bio.cfm&nameid=79201&locid=1" } (R-Sterling Heights) voting in opposition to the bill alongside Democrats.

{ HYPERLINK "http://www.gongwer.com/index.cfm?link=bio.cfm&nameid=161201&locid=1" } (D-Detroit) called the bill "despicable."

"I come before you today with shame and with anger in my heart in the fact that we would take away sick leave from our workers. This is disgraceful. It's unnecessary. It's despicable," Mr. Young said. "This is the worst idea for a bill I've seen since they decided to make Garfield and the Tale of Two Kitties. This bill is so incredibly bad that I think it would make a tear in the space continuum if I blacked out, woke up in a hot tub time machine, and traveled through time so I could stop it and repeal it."

And some others expressed disgust at the passage of the bill as well.

"I suspect that from where most working people and restaurant patrons sit, these lobbyists look like little more than agents for Mr. Scrooge refusing to allow sick days or a decent wage for workers," Danielle Atkinson, director of Mothering Justice, said in a statement. "Sadly, that's hardly an accurate reflection of many local restaurant owners I know who care about their workers and public health."

And { HYPERLINK "http://www.gongwer.com/index.cfm?link=bio.cfm&nameid=270701&locid=1" } (D-Lathrup Village), who has introduced a bill that would allow workers to take earned paid time off to recover from illnesses, said business and employees both lose when someone comes to work sick.

"A healthy workforce leads to a healthy economy, and this Senate Bill is a step in the wrong direction for Michigan," Mr. Hobbs said in a statement. "As state lawmakers, we need to show we're serious about valuing workers and protecting public health by moving towards a statewide policy for all municipalities."

DIA Protection Legislation Waits For Senate Vote, Faces Uncertain Fate In House

The Senate on Wednesday did not take up a bill that would protect the Detroit Institute of Arts' artwork from liquidation should the city of Detroit file for bankruptcy, despite having placed the item on its calendar as intended for final passage.

Senate { HYPERLINK "http://www.gongwer.com/index.cfm?link=bio.cfm&nameid=55701&locid=1" } (R-Monroe) said he expects his legislation, { HYPERLINK "http://www.gongwer.com/index.cfm?link=legislation_billdetail.cfm&billid=2013SB40101" }, will instead be taken up next week. He said there was a degree of complexity to the legislation since it dealt with a law that began in 1885 and had changes made to it.

"(It was the) first time we had talked about it as a caucus so I told them I'd give them a little extra time (and) we would talk again Tuesday," Mr. Richardville said after session. "There's no event there, it's just that it was moving pretty fast and I thought I had a few questions for clarifying. I don't think there will be a problem with the vote on Tuesday."

Indeed, the bill was just introduced last week and reported from the Senate Government Operations Committee on Tuesday. The bill would require an art institute to adhere to the code of ethics for museums as published by the American Alliance for Museums or a successor organization, and specifically a provision that the institute could not sell items from the museum collection unless doing so would to the direct benefit of the institute itself.

The potential caveat helping the case of saving that artwork is that while the city of Detroit owns the DIA and the art within the facility, technically substantial aid comes from people and groups all across the state. And some of that artwork comes from those private parties, too.

If and when the bill clears the Senate, it is unknown how well it will fare in the House. Ari Adler, spokesperson for House { HYPERLINK "http://www.gongwer.com/index.cfm?link=bio.cfm&nameid=226901&locid=1" } (R-Marshall), said the speaker currently does not have any plans to take the bill up before summer recess over a couple of concerns.

"One, we want to try to stay focused right now on keeping Detroit out of bankruptcy," Mr. Adler said. "And the second thing is the speaker is concerned that if you start talking about things that cannot be touched, before long that list starts to include everything."

"That has been a problem for cities like Detroit for many years now," he said. "People say that changes need to be made but don't change the thing that I really like. When you do that, you end up running out solutions."

And { HYPERLINK "http://www.gongwer.com/index.cfm?link=bio.cfm&nameid=245801&locid=1" } was noncommittal on Mr. Richardville's bill when pressed about it at a separate news conference on Wednesday.

"Looking at the legislation, it was just recently introduced," he said of the bill. "I'm happy to review it as part of the process."

Mr. Snyder also declined to say whether he thought a state statute could protect the art from a federal bankruptcy judge.

"My goal is not to see the art of the DIA disappear," he said. "This is a fabulous asset of the city of Detroit. It's very important."

Anger Clear As House Panel Hears On Foreclosure Bills

As the House Financial Services Committee took testimony on a series of bills that would shorten the redemption period homeowners in foreclosure can use to get their house sold or work out a final arrangement to prevent losing their house, it was clear the overflowing crowd watching the meeting was opposed to the measures.

Critics said the bills will increase the number of foreclosures, while supporters said they would help neighborhoods by moving properties to new owners more quickly and help lenders from losing money on damaged homes.

{ HYPERLINK "http://www.gongwer.com/index.cfm?link=bio.cfm&nameid=284701&locid=1" } (R-Nashville), chair of the committee, had to repeatedly ask audience members not to applaud speakers they agreed with or to shout out criticisms of speakers with whom they disagreed.

The panel did not vote on { HYPERLINK "http://www.gongwer.com/index.cfm?link=legislation_billdetail.cfm&billid=2013HB476401" }, { HYPERLINK "http://www.gongwer.com/index.cfm?link=legislation_billdetail.cfm&billid=2013HB476501" }, { HYPERLINK "http://www.gongwer.com/index.cfm?link=legislation_billdetail.cfm&billid=2013HB476601" } and HB 4766. The Senate Banking and Financial Institutions Committee did vote out similar legislation to the full Senate two weeks ago.

Mr. Callton also did not say when the committee would next meet on the package.

But when he adjourned the meeting for the beginning of the House session at 1:30 p.m., several audience members angrily demanded they be allowed to speak.

"What kind of audacity is this?" shouted Jerry Goldberg, a Detroit-based, anti-foreclosure attorney, saying people had come from a great distance to speak at the meeting.

The committee meeting lasted for some 90 minutes, and when the meeting had gone on for nearly 45 minutes, Mr. Callton said there were 35 people left to speak.

The meeting was also marked by the somewhat surprising acknowledgement of { HYPERLINK "http://www.gongwer.com/index.cfm?link=bio.cfm&nameid=269101&locid=1" } (D-Fraser), who said she had been through a foreclosure and was critical of banks taking too long to work with them, in one case letting a short sale of her house slip away.

The legislation is identical to the Senate bills ({ HYPERLINK "http://www.gongwer.com/index.cfm?link=legislation_billdetail.cfm&billid=2013SB38001" }, { HYPERLINK

"http://www.gongwer.com/index.cfm?link=legislation_billdetail.cfm&billid=2013SB38101" }, { HYPERLINK "http://www.gongwer.com/index.cfm?link=legislation_billdetail.cfm&billid=2013SB38201" } and { HYPERLINK "http://www.gongwer.com/index.cfm?link=legislation_billdetail.cfm&billid=2013SB38301" }). When the Senate panel met on the bills, that committee too was packed, but with more officials who work with legislation and foreclosures. The House meeting was marked in part because a number of home owners who had faced foreclosure were present.

{ HYPERLINK "http://www.gongwer.com/index.cfm?link=bio.cfm&nameid=95101&locid=1" } (R-Evart), chair of the Senate committee and sponsor of one of the bills, said the package, which would extend the current 90-day period that lenders and homeowners have to work on resolutions before beginning the foreclosure process, but cut the current six months redemption period to 60 days, was the "right policy" for the state.

Banking officials supported the measure, with several saying they have never seen a house issue resolved during redemption (a spokesperson with the Michigan Bankers Association said the average is about 1 percent of houses in foreclosure can work out a resolution in redemption).

Plus, supporters said homes are often abandoned, with fixtures stolen or destroyed, during the redemption period and there is nothing they can do about it.

But Lorray Brown with the Michigan Poverty Law Program said state law now allows a lender to seize property if it has been abandoned.

And Neeta Delaney of the Michigan Foreclosure Task Force said 60 days in redemption would not be enough time for most lenders and home owners to work out a short sale.

Sam Frangie of the Lansing-based LAFCU said short sales through his institution generally take 60 days. He also said he has never had a situation where a foreclosure was redeemed.

Baxter Jones of Detroit seemed to encapsulate the overall opposition when he said, "Everyone wants to protect the banks." Instead, he said, the Legislature should pass bills to help people stay in their homes.

{ HYPERLINK "http://www.gongwer.com/index.cfm?link=bio.cfm&nameid=217401&locid=1" } (D-Detroit), minority vice chair of the committee, released a statement in opposition to the bills.

"In order for Michigan's economy to make a full recovery, we should be doing everything we can to help our citizens get back on their feet," Mr. Nathan said. "The reduction in redemption periods is unconscionable. It's wrong to dump residents on the street before allowing them a fair chance to make other living arrangements."

Approps Members Chastise DHS Over Adoption Spending

Some House Appropriations Committee members were a bit hot under the collar Wednesday for having to approve a $25.3 million supplemental to allow the Department of Human Services to pay an increase for adoption subsidies.

The issue was not providing the additional $3 per child per day, but that they were not told there was a problem until the supplemental legislation ({ HYPERLINK "http://www.gongwer.com/index.cfm?link=legislation_billdetail.cfm&billid=2013HB411201" }) was put on their desks.

Most of the outrage came from committee Democrats, but { HYPERLINK "http://www.gongwer.com/index.cfm?link=bio.cfm&nameid=205901&locid=1" } (R-Holland), the committee chair, agreed that the department needed some process to notify the Legislature that it was having unexpected budget problems.

The conflict came as the result of the $3 increase that had been included in the current year budget. The intention had been to provide the increase only to certain new foster care and adoption cases, which would have cost about $1.5 million. But department officials discovered that law required them to provide the increase to all current adoption cases, about 27,000 of them, bringing the total needed to about $28 million.

{ HYPERLINK "http://www.gongwer.com/index.cfm?link=bio.cfm&nameid=217601&locid=1" } (D-Detroit) said the department should have raised the issue earlier. "Instead of coming to the Legislature and saying we made a mistake ... you're coming to us and saying we need $28 million to cover up the mistake," she said.

Had officials raised the issue earlier, the statute could have been changed to allow the increases to be applied as intended, she said. And she said department officials, particularly Director Maura Corrigan, should have apologized for allowing the mistake.

Amanda Bright McClanahan, budget director for the department, said Ms. Corrigan had apologized in meetings with legislative leaders. "She has taken full responsibility for the fact that the rate increase was implemented without notification to the Legislature," Ms. Bright McClanahan said. "This was something that was missed by the department, the Legislature and the Executive Branch during the budget process last year."

She said the increase, to all cases, is included in the fiscal year 2013-14 budget. And she said the department had taken steps to prevent such situations in the future.

Ms. Bright McClanahan said the department would not necessarily have supported changing the law to allow increases only to new foster care cases. "If there's a disparity between foster care and adoption, there's a disincentive for foster families to move to adoption," she said, adding that the children involved in the cases were special needs and the incentives were needed to get them into permanent families.

The issue, Ms. Tlaib said, was this was the second time the department had changed its spending without notifying the Legislature. The first time, she said, was the department's decision not to implement the JET program despite it being included in the budget.

And { HYPERLINK "http://www.gongwer.com/index.cfm?link=bio.cfm&nameid=280501&locid=1" } (D-Grand Rapids) said the department had to be sure that, at a minimum, all Appropriations members were included in any communications about budget problems. "Private communication to the leadership is not communication to the entire Legislature," he said.

Members also chafed at the department saying it had a legal opinion finding the payments were required, but would not supply that opinion to the Legislature because it was informal and so covered by attorney-client privilege.

The committee rejected amendments from Ms. Tlaib that would have required the department to find the additional funds, as well as funds for a proposed departmental restructuring, from within its current budget rather than providing additional funds.

Ms. Tlaib also offered language, again rejected, that would have required the department to come up with the funds for some additional Family Independence Program cases generated by a court ruling that the department had improperly removed some families. Most of those families were on only a few months before they were again removed under the federal time limit for cash assistance, Ms. Bright McClanahan said.

Mr. Haveman ruled out of order a motion from { HYPERLINK "http://www.gongwer.com/index.cfm?link=bio.cfm&nameid=31101&locid=1" } (D-Detroit) for Mr. Haveman to draft a letter to the department on behalf of the committee, but Mr. Haveman said he would work with Mr. Durhal on such a letter if one had not already been sent to the department.

The bill, as reported on an 18-0 vote with all Democrats abstaining, represented a $637.5 million gross reduction in the current year budget. General Fund was down $25 million.

The bulk of the bill was a $625.88 million gross reduction for DHS and a $157.24 gross reduction for the Department of Community Health to adjust for expected caseload reductions. Another $15.95 million, this all federal funds, came out of the Department of Education for child care subsidy caseload reductions.

Among some other provisions, the bill included $1 million General Fund for the Department of Agriculture and Rural Development, half to cover shortfalls in food inspection program fees and half to cover bovine tuberculosis testing.

The Department of Education would pass through $350,000 to Marshall Public Schools as it takes on high school students from Albion Public Schools next year. Officials said the funds would cover an expected lag in federal at-risk funds for the receiving district, noting that

Marshall could end up with less at-risk money than Albion depending on its final percentage of at-risk students once the transfer is completed.

Democrats on the committee questioned why similar funds could not have been made available for Buena Vista Public Schools when that district ran out of money last month.

The $1.8 million to the Unemployment Insurance Agency to hire additional fraud inspectors drew fire from both sides of the aisle, with members complaining about the agency's treatment of both businesses and employees.

Stephanie Comai, deputy director in the Department of Licensing and Regulatory Affairs, which houses UIA, said the agency prides itself in customer service, but also always has room to improve. To allegations that the agency is allowing workers to collect thousands of dollars in benefits before filing fraud complaints and requiring repayment, with fees, she said UIA cannot withhold payments until a complaint has been resolved. She said the inspectors were intended to reduce the backlog in cases and reduce the period where improper benefits are being paid.

The bill also allowed the Department of Corrections to spend $2.48 million from Detroit for the Mound Correctional Facility, which is being converted to a detention center. The state is paying $450,000 for some upgrades, including security cameras, but the city is expected to reimburse those costs once it begins operating the facility, officials said.

DHS would also see another $26.19 million in federal funds for retirement costs. Officials said those costs increased faster than projected (the line had generated lapses in prior fiscal years).

Transit in Detroit would see two boosts: $5.4 million in Comprehensive Transportation Fund to make up for expected reductions in support from Detroit for local transit and $10 million in federal funds for a variety of transportation improvements, mostly around the Eastern Market.

The committee rejected an amendment to expand Medicaid as allowed under the federal Patient Protection and Affordable Care Act. That provision had been pushed by { HYPERLINK "http://www.gongwer.com/index.cfm?link=bio.cfm&nameid=245801&locid=1" } but was left out of the 2013-14 budget.

The committee also reported two bills ({ HYPERLINK "http://www.gongwer.com/index.cfm?link=legislation_billdetail.cfm&billid=2013HB466601" } and { HYPERLINK "http://www.gongwer.com/index.cfm?link=legislation_billdetail.cfm&billid=2013HB470801" }) that would extend the hazardous waste management fee through the end of the 2013-14 fiscal year and combine three restricted funds dealing with hazardous waste into a single fund.

It also reported { HYPERLINK "http://www.gongwer.com/index.cfm?link=legislation_billdetail.cfm&billid=2013HB467001" } to allow the Department of State Police to use funds set aside under the Emergency Management Act and { HYPERLINK

"http://www.gongwer.com/index.cfm?link=legislation_billdetail.cfm&billid=2013HB467101" } to eliminate the sunset on the e911 fee.

House Oks Bill Allowing Retired Corrections Officers To Work Indefinitely

The full House narrowly passed a bill on Wednesday that would remove the September 30 sunset date in legislation enacted last year that allows the Department of Corrections to hire retirees to work part time to reduce overtime costs.

The bill ({ HYPERLINK "http://www.gongwer.com/index.cfm?link=legislation_billdetail.cfm&billid=2013HB466401" }) passed 58-51 on mostly party lines. Republicans { HYPERLINK "http://www.gongwer.com/index.cfm?link=bio.cfm&nameid=276301&locid=1" } of Clayton and { HYPERLINK "http://www.gongwer.com/index.cfm?link=bio.cfm&nameid=268601&locid=1" } of Utica joined the 49 Democrats in opposing the bill. { HYPERLINK "http://www.gongwer.com/index.cfm?link=bio.cfm&nameid=228901&locid=1" } (I-Detroit) voted yes.

The legislation is designed to help the department save money in its ever-growing budget. By removing the sunset, supporters said it would help get more retirees working while the department is in the process of training new workers.

HUNTING, ORV FEES: { HYPERLINK "http://www.gongwer.com/index.cfm?link=legislation_billdetail.cfm&billid=2013HB466801" } and { HYPERLINK "http://www.gongwer.com/index.cfm?link=legislation_billdetail.cfm&billid=2013HB466901" } passed 77-32 and 70-39, respectively. The latter would raise fees for off-road vehicles by $10 to $26.25 for a general license. For those who wish to ride on state trails, the license would be $36.25.

Hunters would see a price increase and a change in their licenses as well. They would have to get a base license and additional licenses for certain species. It would cost $10 for a resident base license and $150 for nonresidents. Junior hunters would pay $5 and seniors would pay $4 for a base license. A person would be allowed to hunt small game with a base license.

To hunt deer, the hunter must pay another $20 for the deer license. An elk license would be an additional $100.

The cost of 24-hour and 72-hour fishing licenses increase to $10 from $7 and to $28 from $21, respectively, under the bill. But fees for a resident all-species fishing licenses would decrease to $25 from $28. Nonresident, all-species fishing licenses increase to $75 from $42.

House Panel Reports Veteran Property Tax Exemption

The House Tax Policy Committee reported bills on Wednesday that would extend the property tax exemption so that it would also apply to the principal residence of veterans who have been permanently and totally disabled as the result of military service and are entitled to veterans' benefits at the 100 percent rate.

The bills ({ HYPERLINK "http://www.gongwer.com/index.cfm?link=legislation_billdetail.cfm&billid=2013HB469801" }, { HYPERLINK "http://www.gongwer.com/index.cfm?link=legislation_billdetail.cfm&billid=2013HB411001" } and { HYPERLINK "http://www.gongwer.com/index.cfm?link=legislation_billdetail.cfm&billid=2013SB35201" }) are all very similar and were reported unanimously from committee.

{ HYPERLINK "http://www.gongwer.com/index.cfm?link=bio.cfm&nameid=204001&locid=1" } (D-Farmington Hills) won an amendment for SB 352 that would include language from the other bills in the package ensuring that once a veteran's spouse remarried, he or she would no longer receive the exemption.

Samantha Harkins, representing the Michigan Municipal League, said the league is opposed to the bills simply because it is a piece-meal solution. Ms. Harkins said the Legislature could possibly develop a broader and more comprehensive statewide policy to address what veterans are lacking in services.

Ms. Harkins said property taxes are where local units of government get most of their revenue.

BUSINESS TAX LIABILITY: A bill that would make an officer, manager or partner of a business personally liable only for uncollected trust taxes, or taxes collected from the business for the government, such as sales tax, was also discussed in the House Tax Policy Committee.

The bill ({ HYPERLINK "http://www.gongwer.com/index.cfm?link=legislation_billdetail.cfm&billid=2013SB6401" }) would limit liability to only situations where a business failed to pay a tax from another person and to a person who had been responsible for collecting the tax or filing returns during the time of default.

Dan Papineau, chief of staff for the bill's sponsor, { HYPERLINK "http://www.gongwer.com/index.cfm?link=bio.cfm&nameid=42701&locid=1" } (R-Harrison Township), said under current law a person could be held liable for certain corporate taxes and the Michigan Business Tax.

Mr. Papineau also said few states collect taxes other than trust taxes from individuals if a business hasn't paid.

The bill also would limit the liability of the person to their proportionate share of the tax assessed and require the Department of Treasury to assess the purchaser of a business that owes taxes before assessing a person involved with the company under previous ownership.

Howard Ryan, with the Department of Treasury, said the department is opposed to the bills. Mr. Ryan said the bill does not define trust taxes, and the department is under the impression sales and use taxes would not be considered a trust tax.

Mr. Ryan also said there are many businesses that owe back taxes, have the funds to pay them and just refuse to do so. He said holding a manager, officer or partner personally liable helps the department collect the taxes.

Mr. Ryan said the department is interested in working on different language for the bill that would define trust taxes and ensure if an individual was not liable, he or she would not have to pay the tax.

However, Mr. Papineau said the department's proposed language would make the situation worse.

The chair of the committee, { HYPERLINK "http://www.gongwer.com/index.cfm?link=bio.cfm&nameid=268601&locid=1" } (R-Utica), said the committee will continue to work on the bill in upcoming weeks.

Disaster Fund Bill Clears Senate Appropriations

Legislation that would ensure a minimum level of $2 million in the Disaster and Emergency Contingency Fund and raise the maximum grant to a local government from it won approval Wednesday from the Senate Appropriations Committee.

The move in { HYPERLINK "http://www.gongwer.com/index.cfm?link=legislation_billdetail.cfm&billid=2013SB33001" } is part of { HYPERLINK "http://www.gongwer.com/index.cfm?link=bio.cfm&nameid=245801&locid=1" }'s 2013-14 budget recommendation and would represent a change from how the state has disbursed disaster aid. Historically, the state has not placed money in what is now called the Disaster Contingency Fund. Instead, the state has handled the disbursement of funds through a supplemental appropriations bill.

Backers of the legislation say it will better prepare the state and make the disbursement of funds much smoother.

Under the bill, a county or municipality could obtain a maximum grant from the fund of $100,000 or 10 percent of the local government's operating budget, whichever is less, up from the current $30,000/10 percent level.

The committee adopted an amendment that would mean a smaller ceiling for the fund than originally proposed. The bill initially called for an $8.5 million cap, but under the amendment the cap would be $4.5 million.

The bill won approval on a party-line 11-4 vote. { HYPERLINK "http://www.gongwer.com/index.cfm?link=bio.cfm&nameid=41301&locid=1" } (D-Taylor) abstained.

Local governments would request funds through the Department of State Police, which would decide whether to grant the funds. The governor must have signed an emergency declaration for the situation as well for it to be eligible for funds.

Medicaid Reform Set To See Changes Next Week

{ HYPERLINK "http://www.gongwer.com/index.cfm?link=bio.cfm&nameid=277701&locid=1" }, chair of the House Michigan Competitiveness Committee, said on Wednesday the bill reforming Medicaid reform would see a substitute on Monday for members of the committee to look through, followed by meetings next Tuesday and Wednesday.

The Michigan Competitiveness Committee heard its fourth day of testimony on the bill ({ HYPERLINK "http://www.gongwer.com/index.cfm?link=legislation_billdetail.cfm&billid=2013HB471401" }) designed to gain waivers from the federal government before the state expands Medicaid to 133 percent of the federal poverty level.

Mr. Shirkey (R-Clarklake) said if all goes well, the committee will be in a position to consider voting next on the legislation next week.

Mark Cook, vice president of governmental affairs for Blue Cross Blue Shield of Michigan, said currently, residents who are uninsured go to the emergency room to receive care, and that is the least cost-effective way to get people care.

He also said BCBSM currently has products in the private marketplace where consumers receive savings for going to the doctor and taking steps to improve their health. He said those products have proven to be successful. In the bill proposed in committee, there are incentives to reduce premiums for those who would newly be accepted into the Medicaid program to get healthier.

Mr. Cook also said the state should take advantage of the federal money given for the expansion because the state will otherwise be required to spend more of its own money.

Doug Paterson, with the Michigan Primary Care Association, said the 14 states that have chosen not to implement the Medicaid expansion have increased rates of uncompensated care and will lose $8.4 billion.

Mr. Paterson also expressed concerns with the 48-month limit on Medicaid coverage in the bill. He said he was worried about a situation where a woman would receive Medicaid benefits, then get pregnant after she reached the limit and no longer qualify. He also said various conditions treated do not go away in four years.

"They are able bodied (right now) because we can treat these issues," he said. "But if they were not treated, they would not be able bodied."

Representatives from Michigan Consumers for Health Care said the group was concerned individuals would be penalized if they lived in an area where transportation was an issue and could not comply with the wellness incentives.

The group also said one-third of health care costs come from fraud and abuse, and those issues should be looked at more.

Members of the small business community, including the Michigan Chamber of Commerce, the Michigan Association of Health Plans and the Small Business Association of Michigan said without the expansion, many of their members would have to pay fees under the Affordable Care Act. They also said the expansion could help bend the cost curve by removing the extra costs from those paying for uncompensated care within their insurance rates.

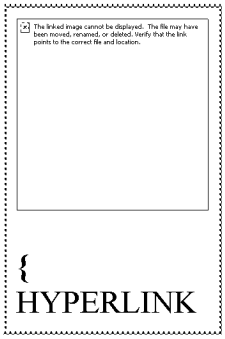
Senate Education Talks Anonymous Reporting Hotline 'Ok-2-Say'

{ HYPERLINK "http://www.gongwer.com/index.cfm?link=bio.cfm&nameid=77201&locid=1" }, the Department of State Police and legislators are in agreement that an anonymous hotline for students and members of the community to report potential for dangerous or violent situations is a good thing, but how exactly that hotline will be organized is still anyone's guess.

The Senate Education Committee on Wednesday took testimony on { HYPERLINK "http://www.gongwer.com/index.cfm?link=legislation_billdetail.cfm&billid=2013SB37401" }, which would create the Michigan Student Safety Act to require the development and implementation of a program that would allow for confidential reports of dangerous, violent or criminal activities to a toll-free hotline.

The Department of Attorney General would develop the program, which Mr. Schuette said in testimony would use $3.5 million fund it has been able to amass from various settlements the state has received.

"What Ok-2-Say is, is really it's an early warning system," Mr. Schuette said. "We try to stop violence in schools before it occurs. Ok-2-Say would be a 24-7 command center of sorts that would receive concerns and threats and then transmit those to the closest responder.



"http://www.gongwer.com/index.cfm?link=bio.cfm&nameid=77201&locid=1" } said on Wednesday that he would like to move legislation on Ok-2-Say before the summer is up.

"The new feature on this which I think is the most fundamental one is the fact that it's confidential," he said. "You eliminate the risk or the fear or concern that this tip would then later be public. It really starts a new dialogue in Michigan."

Mr. Schuette and others continued to refer to a statistic that in the event of serious incidents, whether it was to harm oneself or others, 81 percent of the time there was at least one person other than the perpetrator who knew about it.

"This whole nonsense about don't be a snitch, don't be a nark, we have to stop," Mr. Schuette said. "If we can save the life of even one child, then Ok-2-Say would be of huge value."

But several of the senators on the panel, including { HYPERLINK "http://www.gongwer.com/index.cfm?link=bio.cfm&nameid=93801&locid=1" } (R-St. Clair), chair of the committee, questioned why current hotlines that exist for such purposes were being under-used and how this one would be any different.

Dwayne Gill, legislative liaison for the State Police, responded, "I would imagine that the lack of marketing this hotline that we have could be the reason as to why we have limited calls of service right now."

{ HYPERLINK "http://www.gongwer.com/index.cfm?link=bio.cfm&nameid=251401&locid=1" } (R-Canton Township) said he had hoped the legislation would somehow differentiate this upcoming hotline from others. He also said he wanted to identify how many people would need to staff the hotline, where they would be located and how much money that would cost; as none of that was set in the S-2 substitute of the bill (the committee did not adopt the substitute yet).

The other point of difference both Mr. Gill and Mr. Schuette are hoping to attain with Ok-2-Say is the type of communication available, especially for students. Current hotlines are promoted on the State Police website, Facebook and Twitter, but they do not have much of a presence in schools or on things such as mobile apps, Mr. Gill said.

"We're going to be able to communicate with these children on a level they're used to communicating on," Mr. Gill said, reiterating Mr. Schuette's plans for text message availability, mobile phone apps, and other ways to more effectively reach youth.

The $3.5 million is likely to be used to get the program up and running, Mr. Schuette said, but as long as the legislation keeps moving, he is convinced that his office and others he will be coordinating with will be able to develop the finer details of the program over the summer and before the next school year.

Mr. Pavlov, in speaking to Gongwer News Service after the meeting, said he was unsure whether the funding for the program through the settlements would need to be identified in the current-year budget or identified at all. Technically, the substitute removed language regarding a supplemental and the appropriations process, he said.

He also expects marketing the current hotline will be part of the final product.

"We've got to get the word out. I don't know how they're going to go about it," he said. "We didn't really talk a lot about the implementation of the plan, but clearly we have to be able to make people aware of it."

Mr. Pavlov said it's possible the committee could move the bill before summer recess but wanted to get more details about the development and organization of the program into the bill first.

EAA NOT BEFORE SUMMER RECESS: Mr. Pavlov said on Wednesday he does not expect to take up legislation on expanding the Educational Achievement Authority ({ HYPERLINK "http://www.gongwer.com/index.cfm?link=legislation_billdetail.cfm&billid=2013HB436901" }) before the summer recess, anticipated to be on or around June 21.

There are reportedly significant disagreements between the House and Senate on the language of the bill, but Mr. Pavlov said only, "We just have some work to do on that EAA and it's going to require a little more time to get it right I think."

Asked what kind of work, Mr. Pavlov said, "We've got to work on getting votes." Asked if that was in the committee or in caucus, he said it was "in the Senate." Democrats have largely advocated against the legislation, and recently Senate { HYPERLINK "http://www.gongwer.com/index.cfm?link=bio.cfm&nameid=55701&locid=1" } (R-Monroe) said his caucus isn't too thrilled about it either (See { HYPERLINK "http://www.gongwer.com/index.cfm?link=news.cfm&article_id=521090104" }).

Senate Democrats Announce Winners Of #mi2020 Scholarship

Senate Democrats have announced three winners of their second annual #mi2020 scholarship, originally developed in conjunction with the caucus' plan to approve legislation that would give every Michigan high school senior free college tuition by using money from expiring tax credits.

Though the legislation once received a hearing last term and then died upon the end of session and has yet to be recognized this term, the caucus has kept its scholarship program, which asks current Michigan high school seniors to submit a short video explaining the importance of investing in higher education and how the Michigan 2020 plan is the right investment for the state.

Spencer Genrich of Wyandotte took first place in this year's competition, winning a $10,000 scholarship. Second place went to Sara-Jane Dakroub of Rochester Hills, who received $2,500, and third place went to Nathan Douglas of Bloomingdale, who will receive $1,000.

"I congratulate Spencer, Sara-Jane and Nathan on their winning entries and am excited that we can help them pursue a college education," Senate { HYPERLINK "http://www.gongwer.com/index.cfm?link=bio.cfm&nameid=60101&locid=1" } (D-East Lansing) said in a statement. "This video competition gave students across the state the opportunity to demonstrate their creativity and show us why investing in their futures is investing in our own. Their entries made it clear that the challenges of paying for college are not unique geographically, politically or even economically and show the importance of passing the Michigan 2020 Plan to help all of our kids go to college for free."

The winners were determined by a combination of public vote that included more than 60,000 votes and the votes of a panel of judges that included an educator, a public relations practitioner and a recent college graduate, according to Senate Democrats.

The winning videos can be seen at the Michigan 2020 { HYPERLINK "http://www.michigan2020.com/competition" \t "blank" }.

Bridge Card Fraud Bill Signed By The Governor

{ HYPERLINK "http://www.gongwer.com/index.cfm?link=bio.cfm&nameid=245801&locid=1" } signed a bill Wednesday intended to reduce fraud involving Michigan's Food Assistance program.

"This is a common-sense bill that will continue efforts to save taxpayer dollars by helping keep the Bridge Cards that are intended to help people in need from reaching the hands of criminals," Mr. Snyder said in a statement.

{ HYPERLINK "http://www.gongwer.com/index.cfm?link=legislation_billdetail.cfm&billid=2013HB404201" } (PA 41, immediate effect) makes it mandatory for the Department of Human Services to conduct monthly death record and incarceration checks to ensure Bridge card holders who are deceased or in prison are not still receiving funds.

Department officials have said they were already conducting the checks.

National Guard Director Bill Reported By House Committee

A Senate bill amending the job of an adjutant general, director of the Department of Military and Veterans Affairs, was unanimously reported in a House committee Wednesday.

The House Military and Veterans Affairs Committee reported { HYPERLINK "http://www.gongwer.com/index.cfm?link=legislation_billdetail.cfm&billid=2013SB17501" }, which deals with the job description and retirement changes to the position of adjutant general and assistant adjutant general, as well as expanding some of the governor's authority to enter into agreements with other governors and ordering members of the militia into active service.

The committee also unanimously reported { HYPERLINK "http://www.gongwer.com/index.cfm?link=legislation_billdetail.cfm&billid=2013HB460501" }, { HYPERLINK "http://www.gongwer.com/index.cfm?link=legislation_billdetail.cfm&billid=2013HB473101" }, { HYPERLINK "http://www.gongwer.com/index.cfm?link=legislation_billdetail.cfm&billid=2013HB475201" }

, { HYPERLINK "http://www.gongwer.com/index.cfm?link=legislation_billdetail.cfm&billid=2013HB475401" } and { HYPERLINK "http://www.gongwer.com/index.cfm?link=legislation_billdetail.cfm&billid=2013HB475601" }, with some technical changes to the legislation.

LARA Streamlines 2014 Accountancy License Renewals

The Department of Licensing and Regulatory Affairs on Wednesday said it has streamlined the reporting of continuing professional education and peer review for accountants, and their license renewal must be completed by July 31, 2013.

The license renewal fee paid by July 31, 2013, will be for the license taking effect January 1, 2014, the department said.

The two-year license period had not changed, though, and licenses will still expire December 31 of odd years. Once renewed, the new license registration will expire on December 31, 2015. Registrations are valid until expiration.

The renewal fees for a registered CPA are $50, or $200 for licensed CPAs and licensed firms, respectively.

License and registration renewals not received by the expiration date can be renewed with submission of the regular renewal fee plus an additional $20 late fee within 60 days following the license expiration date, the department said. Licensees who fail to renew online or by mail, or to meet all renewal requirements by the expiration date of the license, cannot legally practice as a certified public accountant or CPA firm and may be subject to disciplinary action if they continue to practice.

STATE CHRISTMAS TREE: The search for the Christmas tree that will stand in front of the Capitol began Wednesday. The Department of Technology, Management and Budget is now taking nominations for a 65-foot tree.

"I know it seems odd to start the search for a Christmas tree at the start of summer," said Phil Jeffery, DTMB chief deputy director, in a press release. "In order to have time to conduct the search and be ready for the lighting festivities in November, this is when we need to start the process."

There are certain requirements that need to be met for the tree, including the height minimum of 65 feet, the maximum trunk diameter of 30 inches, it must be a spruce or a fir tree and it must be given to the state at no cost.

Nominations for the tree will be taken until July 31.

PRE-PAID SALES TAX FOR JULY: Pre-paid gasoline and diesel fuel sales taxes will go up again for wholesalers in July, the Department of Treasury announced in a revenue administrative bulletin, 2013-8.

In July the prepaid sales tax will be 20.8 cents per gallon of gasoline, compared to the 20.5 cents rate set for June, and diesel fuel will go to 22.2 cents per gallon compared to 21.9 cents charged in June.

Appointments By The Governor

MICHIGAN FREEDOM TRAIL COMMISSION: Tamara Barnes of Ann Arbor succeeds Mary Ann Edmond to represent civil rights activists for a term expiring February 1, 2017. The appointment is not subject to the advice and consent of the Senate.

Gay Marriage: Many Unanswered Questions After Rulings

Same-sex marriage is still illegal in Michigan, but the historic decisions by the U.S. Supreme Court on Wednesday open a series of questions and issues on what the future of that illegal status will continue to be.

Supporters of same-sex marriage will certainly see the decision in United States v. Windsor ({ HYPERLINK "http://www.supremecourt.gov/opinions/12pdf/12-307_g2bh.pdf" \t "blank" }) and in Hollingsworth v. Perry ({ HYPERLINK "http://www.supremecourt.gov/opinions/12pdf/12-144_8ok0.pdf" \t "blank" }) as a spur toward efforts to end Michigan's 2004 amendment barring same-sex marriage.

At the same time, opponents of same-sex marriage took comfort that the court did not end the ability of a state to define marriage, but also said they would be prepared to fight to maintain the state's constitutional ban.

While same-sex marriage supporters are anticipating putting a ballot issue before the voters in 2016, to repeal the 2004 amendment (see related story), there is a chance the issue could come to the fore well before that through the federal court case being heard by U.S. District Judge Bernard Friedman in Detroit.

Aside from the issue of whether or not Michigan's ban remains, the decisions also raise some technical questions. If for example, a same-sex couple married in a state that does recognize the marriage and moves to Michigan, would Michigan have to recognize that marriage?

A spokesperson for { HYPERLINK "http://www.gongwer.com/index.cfm?link=bio.cfm&nameid=77201&locid=1" } said no, and the decision itself in Windsor would suggest the same since the case dealt specifically with Section 3 of the 1996 federal Defense of Marriage Act that provided a specific federal definition of marriage to a laundry list of federal laws. Section 2 of the act permits a state to not recognize a same-sex marriage from another state and that section was not the subject of the decision.

But even more technical questions remain, such as could that couple - married, for example, in Massachusetts or New York where same-sex marriage is legal, but living in Michigan - be permitted to file their federal income tax jointly from Michigan and would Michigan then disallow a joint filing of state income taxes?

In the Windsor decision, the 5-4 majority ruled that the federal DOMA violated equal protection. The majority opinion by Justice Anthony Kennedy held that states do have the authority to set marriage requirements, but that the law treated some marriages differently.

"The responsibility of the States for the regulation of domestic relations is an important indicator of the substantial societal impact the State's classifications have in the daily lives and customs of its people. DOMA's unusual deviation from the usual tradition of recognizing and accepting state definitions of marriage here operates to deprive same-sex couples of the benefits and responsibilities that come with the federal recognition of their marriages," Mr. Kennedy said.

"The avowed purpose and practical effect of the law here in question are to impose a disadvantage, a separate status, and so a stigma upon all who enter into same-sex marriages made lawful by the unquestioned authority of the States," he added.

The Hollingsworth decision dealing with California's Proposition 8, let stand a lower court's ruling barring the Golden Bear State's constitutional prohibition, saying the proponents of the ban had no standing to oppose the ruling.

Kary Moss, executive director of the American Civil Liberties Union of Michigan, said for a time interpreting the overall effect of the decisions "is going to be a bit messy."

But she said the decision was "really important" and that Wednesday was a "historic day."

Garrett Arwa, executive director for the Michigan Democratic Party, also called the decision historic and said people should celebrate. The party, he said, stands for marriage equality.

(Officials with the Michigan Republican Party did not put out a statement on the decision.)

Equality Michigan said the ruling allows gay couples to enjoy the same federal benefits that other married couples have, but that same-sex couples in Michigan will have to get married in other states to obtain those benefits.

Jessica Tramontana of Progress Michigan said the U.S. decision meant it was time for Lansing politicians, such as Mr. Schuette, to "get on board and stop wasting our tax dollars defending unconstitutional, hateful legislation."

But Mr. Schuette issued a statement saying the decisions affirmed that the states had the right to define marriage. "Michigan's Constitution stands and the will of the people to define marriage as between one man and one woman endures in the Great Lakes State," he said.

But one of the two Republican legislators who did not vote for the proposed Marriage Protection Amendment on the House floor in 2004, which led to the petition drive to put the matter before the voters, praised the Supreme Court.

Former Rep. Lorence Wenke said Wednesday was a "gratifying" day. "This decision, coupled with the nation's overall shift toward acceptance of same sex marriage, affirms what my heart and conscience told me back in 2004. Discrimination is never acceptable, and above all, should not be sanctioned or legitimized by elected officials - the very people who have taken an oath to ensure equal protection under the law for each and every citizen," he said.

The Michigan Catholic Conference issued a statement saying that, "We will continue to promote the truth that marriage is and can only be the union of one man and one woman, and that children have the right to both a mother and father." That statement, also posted from the organization's Twitter account, developed into a social media fight in which supporters of gay marriage criticized the group's position.

James Muffett, president of the Michigan branch of Citizens for Traditional Values, said the refusal to "usurp federalism" was the only "silver lining in the card." He said he was also astonished that a year ago in upholding the federal Affordable Care Act the "court bent over backward to protect legislative prerogative" but would not do so to protect DOMA.

He also said he found Mr. Kennedy's comments personally disturbing in that they suggested there was something wrong with traditional marriage.

Mr. Muffett also said he and other supporters of the 2004 ban knew that same-sex marriage advocates were going to pursue a ballot proposal and they would be prepared for it by ensuring their supporters understood what was at stake.

But the issue may come to a head before a 2016 ballot campaign. In March, Mr. Friedman, in a case dealing with the state's ban on same-sex couples jointly adopting children, invited the parties to expand the issue on one dealing with same-sex marriage, and they did so. But Mr. Friedman held off issuing a ruling until the U.S. Supreme Court acted.

With the decisions now in place, Ms. Moss said she expected Mr. Friedman to require supplemental briefs and then hold a hearing on those briefs.

And the decisions, Ms. Moss said that in ruling same-sex marriage is constitutional, defenders must apply a more stringent standard than a reasonable basis argument.

Mr. Muffett also said he and supporters of traditional marriage will watch that case carefully.

Republican National Committeeman Dave Agema, a strident opponent of gay marriage, posted several items on the decisions on his Facebook page.

"I truly doubt this would pass in a nationwide ballot," he wrote. "They have pushed immorality upon us. Like Lincoln said, an oligarchy of 5 men can change the peoples' law. It's not their job to make law but defend the Constitution. Our forefathers are rolling over on this one."

And however Mr. Friedman rules, it is unlikely appeals will run into the same situation as they did in California, where the administration of Governor Jerry Brown decided against contesting the lower court ruling, leaving no one with standing to appeal the 9th U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals. Mr. Schuette would likely either challenge a ruling against the state or defend a ruling in its favor.

A spokesperson for { HYPERLINK "http://www.gongwer.com/index.cfm?link=bio.cfm&nameid=245801&locid=1" } said the Constitution now bans same-sex marriage and the governor will uphold the Constitution. That has long been Mr. Snyder's response to the issue. If the Constitution were changed, Mr. Snyder would uphold and respect that as well, the spokesperson said.

In an email statement, Sara Wurfel said nothing about whether Mr. Snyder would support changing the Constitution, however. Mr. Snyder's focus remains on building jobs in the state, creating a healthy Michigan and the state's children.

Dems Urge Legislature To Repeal Michigan Ban On Gay Marriage

House and Senate Democrats who introduced legislation allowing same-sex couples to marry said Wednesday they are pleased with the U.S. Supreme Court's rulings striking down the federal Defense of Marriage Act and Proposition 8 in California.

House Democrats who introduced legislation earlier this week said the ruling that DOMA is unconstitutional helps pave the way for Michigan to end discrimination toward same-sex couples.

{ HYPERLINK "http://www.gongwer.com/index.cfm?link=bio.cfm&nameid=319301&locid=1" } (D-Ann Arbor), who sponsored some of the marriage equality legislation in the House announced this week, said he believes the issue of same-sex marriage is one of civil rights and he was hoping for a national ruling against barring states from prohibiting same-sex marriages. But he said he was still happy with the DOMA ruling.

"Obviously thrilled, in particularly about the DOMA ruling," Mr. Zemke said. "If you read some of the more intricate details of the decision, it was quite clear this was kind of a no-brainer. It is blatantly discriminatory to treat a man and a woman who are married differently than ... two people of the same sex who are legally married."

{ INCLUDEPICTURE \d "http://www.gongwer.com/members/GretchenWhitmer.jpg" \y * MERGEFORMATINET }

meid=60101& locid=1" } Mr. Zemke said now that there is a clear message from the federal government that same-sex marriage is a states' rights issue, the legislation introduced will become more important. He also said not providing marriage and other rights to gay people in the state negatively affects the perception of the state for those looking to live in Michigan.

And he said residents of the state have changed their mind on the issue.

"When you're seeing this amount of traction in one direction on an issue ... and your current statutes dictate something completely the opposite, I think it's kind of irresponsible to not look at that issue," he said. "I don't see any data to support continuing Michigan's current ban and discriminatory practices for those in the LBGTQ community to show me that is a good idea ... nor do I think it is from a moral perspective."

Ari Adler, spokesperson for House { HYPERLINK "http://www.gongwer.com/index.cfm?link=bio.cfm&nameid=226901&locid=1" } (R-Marshall), said the speaker did not have a reaction to the court's ruling.

"The people of Michigan were clear in 2004 when they defined marriage in the state Constitution as being between one man and one woman," Mr. Adler said. "There are no plans to do anything in the Legislature to change that."

{ HYPERLINK "http://www.gongwer.com/index.cfm?link=bio.cfm&nameid=274601&locid=1" } (D-Ann Arbor) said Republicans have the chance to come around on the issue.

"Republicans are really going to have ... to come to the realization that government shouldn't be sticking its nose in people's bedrooms, and granting certain rights to some people and not others based on personal choices - that's big government," Mr. Irwin said.

Mr. Irwin said there is a shift in public opinion on the issue, and Republican legislators, who work for the people, are going to realize that "people acknowledge a same-sex marriage does not threaten their heterosexual marriage any more than divorce does."

{ HYPERLINK "http://www.gongwer.com/index.cfm?link=bio.cfm&nameid=322301&locid=1" } (D-East Lansing) said the court's ruling will help move the conversation forward and begin to right a wrong that has been given to couples around the country.

"My hope is that people will take a look at the Supreme Court decision acknowledging discrimination in the federal law and look at the discrimination in state law," he said.

Mr. Singh also said he is confident if the Legislature does not take up legislation repealing the state's constitutional ban on same-sex marriage, citizen groups will collect signatures to take it to the voters. Activists are targeting the 2016 ballot.

{ HYPERLINK "http://www.gongwer.com/index.cfm?link=bio.cfm&nameid=230301&locid=1" } (D-Battle Creek) said the rulings are a good starting point for where the state wants to go, but there is still work to be done.

"I think it's a good tool to start with to start with in the Legislature," she said. "We do have a ways to go with the legislators."

Ms. Segal, along with { HYPERLINK "http://www.gongwer.com/index.cfm?link=bio.cfm&nameid=32801&locid=1" } (D-Detroit), sponsored legislation ({ HYPERLINK "http://www.gongwer.com/index.cfm?link=legislation_billdetail.cfm&billid=2013SB40601" }{ HYPERLINK "http://www.gongwer.com/index.cfm?link=legislation_querymanager.cfm&billid=2013SB40601" } and a House bill yet to be formally introduced) that would require the state to recognize same-sex marriages from other states.

"I am proud of the Supreme Court decisions today that extends equality to more Americans," Mr. Smith said in a Facebook post. "These decisions are bittersweet however considering the action yesterday in regards to the Voting Rights Act. I look forward to the future when Michigan joins the growing number of states who support marriage equity."

{ HYPERLINK "http://www.gongwer.com/index.cfm?link=bio.cfm&nameid=161801&locid=1" } (D-Highland Park) introduced { HYPERLINK "http://www.gongwer.com/index.cfm?link=legislation_billdetail.cfm&billid=2013SR6401" }{ HYPERLINK "http://www.gongwer.com/index.cfm?link=legislation_querymanager.cfm&billid=2013SR6401" }, which called on Congress to overturn the Defense of Marriage Act, done in part by Supreme Court on Wednesday.

"It's a big victory for people in general and not just folks of the gay community but really for American from an equality standpoint," Mr. Johnson said.

As for how the rulings change the discussion over same-sex marriages and couples' rights in Michigan, Mr. Johnson said he thought that was actually one of the major components of the opinions.

"The states have the ability now, so I think in various locales across the country the way has been paved legally that they can take their direction from the Supreme Court," he said.

He added: "Dare I say myself and other Senate Democrats are a little ahead of the curve," when it comes to public opinion and the direction of gay rights. "(The rulings are) confirmation of what we thought and asked the federal government to do something about."

Senate { HYPERLINK "http://www.gongwer.com/index.cfm?link=bio.cfm&nameid=60101&locid=1" } (D-East Lansing) issued a statement calling the ruling "a proud step forward for our nation" that "affirms the belief that love, not politics, should be the only factor that determines whether any two Americans choose to get married."

Ms. Whitmer also said the rulings and public polling make it clear it is time to move forward on ensuring those rights, opportunities and protections in Michigan. She is the sponsor of { HYPERLINK "http://www.gongwer.com/index.cfm?link=legislation_billdetail.cfm&billid=2013SB40501" }{ HYPERLINK "http://www.gongwer.com/index.cfm?link=legislation_querymanager.cfm&billid=2013SB40501" } to repeal the statutory ban on same-sex marriages.

"It's very exciting and I do think that the rulings really say that the states should move forward and grant these rights, and I'd love for Michigan to be the next state to do that," Ms. Whitmer said in a phone interview.

Asked about the viability of moving her caucus' legislation, she said there are actually some Republicans - particularly in the House - who are supportive of their efforts.

"When you look at the polling, more people support gay marriage than identify themselves as Democrats, so that tells me there are people on both sides of the aisle that embrace this," she said. "We're going to continue to push. We are eager to see some action whether it starts in the House or the Senate. It's never been about credit. It's been about doing the right thing and we're going to push."

But even outside of what does or does not happen in the Legislature, Ms. Whitmer said she believes "it's only a matter of time" before the issue finds resolve.

"I'd love to see Michigan not be the last one to the table on this issue like we have with so many other issues," she said.

Richardville Names Medicaid Work Group

Senate { HYPERLINK "http://www.gongwer.com/index.cfm?link=bio.cfm&nameid=55701&locid=1" } on Wednesday announced the appointment of six members of the Senate Republican caucus to a work group that will study and offer possible options for reforming Medicaid in Michigan.

The work group will be headed by { HYPERLINK "http://www.gongwer.com/index.cfm?link=bio.cfm&nameid=84601&locid=1" } (R-Saginaw Township), who has long been a proponent of expanding Medicaid and including reforms that encourage healthy behaviors and personal responsibility for recipients.

{ HYPERLINK "http://www.gongwer.com/index.cfm?link=bio.cfm&nameid=56201&locid=1" } (R-Hillsdale), also a proponent of expanding access to low-income individuals - though not through an expansion of Medicaid - will also be on the work group, as well as { HYPERLINK "http://www.gongwer.com/index.cfm?link=bio.cfm&nameid=54001&locid=1" } (R-Grand

Senate { HYPERLINK "http://www.gongwer.com/index.cfm?link=bio.cfm&nameid=55701&locid=1" }

"At the end of last week, I made it clear that the debate and discussion regarding Medicaid is not over," Mr. Richardville (R-Monroe) said in a statement. "A comprehensive plan for a healthy Michigan is critical to the well-being of our population and our state."

In reviewing the make-up of the workgroup, most of those involved are considerable persuadable senators on the issue although Mr. Caswell has been a staunch opponent of Medicaid expansion to date.

Mr. Caswell has also introduced { HYPERLINK "http://www.gongwer.com/index.cfm?link=legislation_billdetail.cfm&billid=2013SB42201" }, which could prove to be a starting point in the discussion. The bill is designed to assist the poor with obtaining health insurance through the state reducing premium contributions or cost-sharing or providing additional benefits for those with incomes up to 100 percent of the federal poverty level.

"Today I am happy to announce the formation of a workgroup that will soon meet and discuss ways that we might be able to improve upon existing legislation," Mr. Richardville said. "The members of this workgroup, led by Senator Kahn, all have a specific interest in this issue. I look forward to reviewing their suggestions and sharing that information with my fellow legislators, the governor and the speaker."

{ HYPERLINK "http://www.gongwer.com/index.cfm?link=bio.cfm&nameid=245801&locid=1" }, while traveling across the state to advocate to health professionals, residents and other stakeholders that they call Senate Republicans and urge them to "take a vote, not a vacation" on the House Medicaid bill, called the creation of the work group "good progress."

But, Mr. Snyder said, he is also urging Senate leadership to establish a specific date for a vote on legislation. At a Medicaid event in Grand Rapids on Tuesday, Mr. Snyder said his preference would be movement in weeks, not months, and getting into the fall could be too late (See { HYPERLINK "http://www.gongwer.com/index.cfm?link=news.cfm&article_id=521240101" }).

"Passing this bill is critical to the well-being of our citizens and the vitality of our economy," Mr. Snyder said Wednesday. "The bill will provide health care coverage for nearly half-a-million more Michigan residents while also encouraging people to take responsibility for making smart choices when it comes to their own health. This initiative will save money for taxpayers and employers."

He announced he would visit the Genesys Health System in Grand Blanc on Thursday to continue discussions on the issue. That is notably in Mr. Robertson's district.

Meanwhile, others in and around Lansing continued to advocate for a vote on the current legislation, { HYPERLINK "http://www.gongwer.com/index.cfm?link=legislation_billdetail.cfm&billid=2013HB471401" } . Several organizations seeking a solution to reform and expanding Medicaid on Wednesday unveiled Reform Medicaid Now, and launched an online petition urging the Senate to return to Lansing and pass the bill that is quickly being referred to as the "Healthy Michigan plan."

The { HYPERLINK "http://www.healthymichigannow.com" \t "blank" } features an online petition, a tool to connect citizens with their state senators, and more information about the Healthy Michigan plan.

Wayne State Breaks Tuition Cap With 8.9% Increase

Wayne State University will lose some of its state funding now that is has approved an 8.9 percent tuition increase for the coming school year.

The 2013-14 state higher education budget included a 3.75 percent cap on tuition increases for state universities, which all of the other institutions have followed. With that cap came 0.29 percent additional state funding.

Officials decided the $534,700 in state aid they would lose was worth it to otherwise balance a $576 million budget. The university also did not receive any funding for three of the five performance metrics.

"The current system of determining increases in state appropriations hurts universities like Wayne State that serve non-traditional students," WSU President Allan Gilmour said in a statement. "That is unfortunate, because Wayne State is a valuable asset to Michigan in many ways. We graduate thousands of students every year - most of them Michigan residents who stay in Michigan to live and work."

The university sought to offset the tuition increase by increasing financial aid by 11 percent.

OAKLAND UNIVERSITY: Oakland University's Board of Trustees approved a 3.75 percent tuition increase for the coming year, increasing annual undergraduate tuition to $11,108 from $10,706 for the past school year.

The board did not increase tuition for graduate students or out-of-state undergraduate students.

Pontiac Official To Serve As Hamtramck EM

Cathy Square, who was city administrator in Pontiac, will serve as emergency manager in Hamtramck after the city asked for the appointment.

Ms. Square is set to take her new post on July 1. She has been administrator and head of the human resources and public works departments in Pontiac since 2011 and is prior chief operating officer for the city of Detroit as well as that city's former director of public works.

"Cathy Square's extensive municipal government experience, specifically in southeast Michigan, makes her well-suited to assume the duties of emergency manager for Hamtramck," { HYPERLINK "http://www.gongwer.com/index.cfm?link=bio.cfm&nameid=245801&locid=1" } said of the appointment. "I am certain Cathy will work collaboratively with local officials, citizens, and others to address the financial crisis in Hamtramck and ensure residents receive the essential services they need and deserve."

Mr. Snyder had confirmed a financial emergency in the city on June 11 and the city council voted to accept appointment of an emergency manager on June 12. It is the first instance under the Local Financial Stability and Choice Act in which a community has had the chance to choose whether it wants an emergency manager, to file Chapter 9 bankruptcy, a consent agreement or go to mediation.

FLINT MANAGER: Mike Brown, who was Flint city administrator under retiring Emergency Manager Ed Kurtz, will take over that top spot when Mr. Kurtz retires July 3, Mr. Snyder announced Wednesday.

Mr. Brown had originally been appointed emergency manager, but was ineligible for reappointment when { HYPERLINK "http://www.gongwer.com/index.cfm?link=legislation_billdetail.cfm&billid=2011HB421401" } was suspended. Once PA 72 of 1990 came back into effect, Mr. Brown was ineligible under a provision ruling out city official from serving as emergency financial manager.

iLottery On Hold

It is unclear when or if the Lottery will sell tickets or offer games online with the Legislature's denial of funds for the program in the fiscal year 2013-14 budget.

"The lottery has suspended plans for iLottery pending further evaluation," spokesperson Andi Brancato said Wednesday.

Ms. Brancato said there was not yet any public timeline for when that evaluation might be complete, nor any parameters for that evaluation.

Legislators had rejected funding for the project over concerns that the online sales would undercut traditional lottery retailers and would make tickets too easy to purchase for those with gambling addictions.

Byrum Looking Into Same-Sex Marriage Licenses After Decision

Two former state representatives now serving as county clerks said Wednesday that while they are pleased with Wednesday's decisions by the Supreme Court on same-sex couples, more questions still remain as to whether Michigan can start to issue same-sex marriage licenses.

"I'm reaching out to legal counsel and the team about figuring out what our options are and if this ruling will allow us to stop denying same-sex couples (a license to wed)," said Ingham County

Clerk Barb Byrum. "I believe we should welcome the opportunity to perform such ceremonies in our county. I look forward to working with our legal counsel and our team to move our county forward."

Ruling a portion of the Defense of Marriage Act unconstitutional means same-sex couples cannot be denied federal benefits of lawfully-wed couples, but what remains in question is how the ruling, if at all, relates to the state. Ms. Byrum said she has been talking with legal counsel on what questions can be answered but would not say what those legal questions involved at this point.

Oakland County Clerk and Register of Deeds Lisa Brown is also in a unique position when it comes to Wednesday's rulings because of an adoption case involving a Hazel Park lesbian couple. Michigan's Adoption Code prohibits joint adoption by unmarried or same-sex couples, so trying to acquire legal protections as a pair rather than on an individual basis in such a case is not allowed.

At the judge's invitation, the case was amended in March to test the legality of the 2004 constitutional amendment that stipulates Michigan only recognizes marriages between a man and a woman. But U.S. District Judge Bernard Friedman stayed the case until the Supreme Court ruled on the cases it did on Wednesday, and now Ms. Brown says she is in a wait-and-see mode before she can officially grant marriage licenses for same-sex couples.

"Personally I'm thrilled with the decision of bringing marriage equality to so many people in our country and hope Michigan follows suit soon," Ms. Brown said. "Once deemed constitutional, I'd be happy to help any loving couple in Michigan, whether they're same sex or heterosexual, I don't care. Love is love and I believe in equality."

While she does not have a crystal ball to see what Judge Friedman will do, Ms. Brown said she personally thinks the rulings will give the judge a "positive path" to take for same-sex couples in Michigan.

And Ms. Byrum said she believes the ruling on DOMA was a step toward moving the country forward, adding that she was "pleasantly surprised."

"I believe this is a big win for couples," Ms. Byrum said. "It's huge for our country because finally we can stop treating people differently. Love is love. We need to support all of our residents."

Courts To Share Juror Pool

The 36th District Court in Detroit will no longer develop its own jury pool, { HYPERLINK "http://www.gongwer.com/index.cfm?link=bio.cfm&nameid=76201&locid=1" }, the special administrator for the court, announced this week.

The court has in recent years conducted fewer than 12 jury trials per year, but had still been sending summonses for jury pools each week. Under the plan, the district court would draw

Detroit residents from the Wayne Circuit Court jury pool should it need to conduct a trial. The court will arrange transportation from the circuit court to the district court if needed.

"Each person who reports for jury service, even if he or she never sees the inside of a courtroom, must be paid $25 and mileage according to state law," Mr. Talbot said. "By ending the unnecessary summons of 4,500 citizens, we save their time and the taxpayer's money."

The new system will begin July 1, but, as summonses have already been issued for July, those potential jurors will be told to report to the circuit court and included in that court's jury pool as well.

Court: Child Need Not Be Biological For Estate Settlements

The Court of Appeals ruled Tuesday that a child of a deceased parent need not be biologically related to be the personal representative of the parent's estate.

In the case In Re Daniels Estate, { HYPERLINK "publicdocs.courts.mi.gov:81/OPINIONS/FINAL/COA/20130625_C311310_38_311310.OPN.PDF" \t "blank" }, the decedent's biological daughter did not want the decedent's son, who at the time of the trial had not been proven as biologically related, to replace her as the personal representative of the estate.

What separates this case from other estate settlement cases of this nature is that the son's mother and presumed father were living together at the time of the his birth, but they were not married. State law says that if a child is born to a married couple, the father is considered the child's natural father, even if the father is not the biological parent.

It was a per curiam decision, signed by { HYPERLINK "http://www.gongwer.com/index.cfm?link=bio.cfm&nameid=109101&locid=1" }, { HYPERLINK "http://www.gongwer.com/index.cfm?link=bio.cfm&nameid=220101&locid=1" } and { HYPERLINK "http://www.gongwer.com/index.cfm?link=bio.cfm&nameid=245601&locid=1" }.

The court ruled that the son could become the personal representative of his father's estate because state law says, "If a child is born out of wedlock or if a child is born or conceived during a marriage but is not the issue of that marriage, a man is considered to be the child's natural father for purposes of intestate succession if ... the man and child have established a mutually acknowledged relationship of parent and child that begins before the child becomes age 18 and continues until terminated by the death of either."

The court rejected the daughter's assertion that a relationship between parent and child must be biological for the child to serve as the parent's estate representative.

"This argument is inconsistent with the language of the statute," the court wrote.

MEDC Grants Six Incentives Across Michigan

The Michigan Economic Development Corporation on Wednesday announced state incentives for six community redevelopment projects that are projected to total more than $82.2 million in private investment and 213 new, direct jobs in Michigan, a statement said.

Those receiving incentives:

- Kirco CH Distribution, LLC has been awarded a $1 million Community Revitalization Program incentive for the Cardinal Health Inc. Redevelopment Project in Detroit, which includes the demolition of all the existing structures on about 23 acres, as well as redevelopment of the area for a medical distribution facility for Cardinal Health;

- URC FJ, LLC, a subsidiary of Uptown Reinvestment Corporation, was awarded a CRP incentive to the tune of more than $5.64 million to redevelop four city blocks in downtown Flint, creating a health and wellness district;

- The former Flint Journal headquarters will make way for Michigan State University's Flint Public Health and Medical Campus project, and include 16 loft-style apartments and office spaces;

- The Village of Cassopolis received a $400,000 community development block grant for on-the-job training for the Postle Operating, LLC expansion project. The company is a producer of extruded aluminum products for recreational vehicles, the MEDC said;

- Frankenmuth was awarded $249,975 in CDBG funds for infrastructure improvements for the Kremin, Incorporated, construction project in Frankenmuth as well;

- The Grand Rapids Brownfield Redevelopment Authority will use school and local tax capture money to demolish two buildings located at 600 Douglas Street and construct four multi-story residential buildings consisting of 18 units; and

- Riverside Senior Care Project in Grand Rapids will be developed from Brownfield Redevelopment Authority money that will partially demolish a functionally obsolete former elementary school.

Environmentalists Praise President Obama's Climate Change Speech

Following President Barack Obama's speech on climate change, leading environmentalists in Michigan hailed his proposals Wednesday, especially the new restrictions on carbon emissions from power plants.

"The president called for first ever limits on carbon pollution from new and existing power plants," according to Wibke Heymach, Michigan state field organizer for Moms Clean Air Force. "Pollution is dirty and deadly, and doesn't belong in our air."

Art Toy, president of Four Elements Energy, said the proposed changes by Mr. Obama will help move the nation away from depending on fossil fuels. Mr. Toy also said clean energy is becoming more affordable, which will help move the country in the direction of clean energy.

Mr. Obama has directed his administration to develop federal regulations on greenhouse gases that power plants emit. He also called for increasing renewable energy production on federal land and other measures.

Campaign Notes

CARPENTERS UNION ENDORSES SCHAUER: The Michigan Regional Council of Carpenters and Millwrights, which endorsed { HYPERLINK "http://www.gongwer.com/index.cfm?link=bio.cfm&nameid=245801&locid=1" } in 2010, instead is endorsing Democratic candidate Mark Schauer in 2014. The union has seethed about Mr. Snyder's decision to sign right-to-work legislation in December.

"Mark Schauer has shown time and time again that he is a champion for middle-class families, fighting to make sure ordinary men and women get decent wages, safe working conditions and a quality of life that helps them care for their families," said Mike Jackson, the union's executive secretary-treasurer. "Carpenters and millwrights are eager to stand behind a candidate who will stand up for ordinary Michiganders, not corporate CEOs and big banks on Wall Street, as Rick Snyder has repeatedly chosen to do. Michigan deserves a governor who will keep his word, not betray us, as Snyder has done."

Tea Party Becoming More Organized, Possibly A Bigger Factor In 2014

At least three conservative or tea party Republicans are currently running for open House seats in 2014 and a more organized and campaign-savvy tea party could make those candidates more successful in 2014.

Both candidates and campaign consultants say the movement has matured over the past couple of election cycles and could drive outcomes in at least a few races around the state next year.

Dan McMaster, a Republican consultant with Lansing-based Grassroots Midwest, said those involved in the state's tea party movement are watching, listening and no longer just showing up. Mr. McMaster said the group is very good at communicating and networking and all it takes for a win is the "right place, right seat, right time."

Among those candidates already declared is Wendy Day, a former Howell School Board Trustee who is running for the open seat in the 47th District. She said it's not good enough for candidates to put on a Republican label while running, and conservative members of the tea party have shown the importance of primaries. Voters can judge what kind of Republican you are through primaries, she said.

She said the tea party has been successful because it carries a believable message: "stop the government from spending our money irresponsibly," she said.

The 47th District is open because Rep. Cindy Denby (R-Handy Township) is term limited and cannot seek re-election.

Ms. Day said in the past the candidates who believe in limited government have not been trained well in strategies that get their message across the way Democrats or liberals can. But, she said, now they're learning how to build coalitions, network and communicate the message.

"The left is doing everything right and they still can only get 50 percent of the vote because their message is wrong," she said.

Ms. Day said she was motivated to run after President Barack Obama won the 2012 presidential election and she wanted to strengthen the Legislature so it could push back against Washington, D.C.

"The limited government message is true and right and will provide the best outcome for country and state," she said. "If you want to see what the alternative is, look at Detroit."

Republican strategist Jake Davison said with more tea party candidates and possibly more tea party winners in 2014, a fiscally conservative Republican caucus would obviously be the result.

"More fiscally conservative, and more of a problem for what Governor Snyder wants to do," he said.

Mr. McMaster said he wouldn't be surprised if more tea party-like Republicans ran in open seats on the west side of the state, including in Rep. Bob Genetski's (R-Saugatuck) and Rep. Wayne Schmidt's (R-Traverse City) seats. He also said the tea party movement has a lot of momentum in the Thumb Area, where a tea party meeting can draw hundreds but a Republican Party meeting doesn't get the same turn out.

Gary Glenn, who is running in House Majority Floor Leader Jim Stamas' (R-Midland) open seat in the 98th District, said the tea party is becoming more organized, but still remaining separate. He said there aren't tea party officials recruiting and supporting candidates collectively, but he believes there will be many other tea party candidates announcing for a 2014 election, particularly in the House.

Mr. Glenn said he does not feel pressure to win as part of a larger party movement, but he feels personal pressure to win the election in 2014.

"The last off year, without a presidential election, in 2010, it was certainly a very strongly positive result for candidates who believe in constitutional principles (and) limited government," he said. "I expect it will be the case again."

Mr. Glenn ran for U.S. Senate in 2012 and is president of the American Family Association of Michigan and he said his broad variety of experience and passion for public policy inspired him to run for the House seat. He also said his record, which includes setting up a right to work law in Idaho, proves he can use his experience to gain real results.

Lana Theis, running in the 42nd District currently filled by term limited Rep. Bill Rogers (R-Brighton) said she does not consider herself a member of the tea party necessarily, but that she is certainly a conservative. She said she also feels no pressure to win on behalf of a tea party movement.

Ms. Theis is a former Livingston County Republican Party chair, and currently Brighton Township treasurer.

Pontiac Schools Facing Financial Emergency

With a $37.7 million general fund deficit, Pontiac School District is in a financial emergency, a review team determined in a report released Friday.

Governor Rick Snyder now has 10 days to decide if he agrees with the report and declare a financial emergency in the district, which could mean appointment of an emergency manager.

The finding was not unexpected, given discussions earlier in the year that the district might not have enough money to open this coming fall. Legislators had originally considered including the district under the recently-enacted school district dissolution law, but Mr. Snyder and others had argued the district was too large to dissolve that quickly without causing disruptions for the surrounding districts that would be receiving students.

The key finding for the review team, which has been working in the district since July 3, was the deficit, which is four times what it was in 2009 despite statutory requirements that the district take steps to reduce the number. Most of that increase came in the 2012 budget, which showed a deficit more than twice that of the prior year.

Review of audits found that, at least for the last three years, the district has budgeted for more revenue than it actually received and then spent more than it budgeted. It also appeared to have used pension funds to cover payroll.

The deficit was made worse by a January court judgment that the district owed the Michigan Education Special Services Association $7.8 million for health care.

The district also missed a $1.4 million payment in May on the energy bonds it issued in 2006.

Under PA 436 of 2012, the district would have the option of having an emergency manager appointed, negotiating a consent agreement, filing bankruptcy or seeking a neutral evaluation if Mr. Snyder agrees with the review team's findings.

School district officials did not return calls for comment.

But Pontiac Education Association President Aimee McKeever put the problem back on the governor.

"Students and school employees in Pontiac are innocent victims of Governor Snyder's massive cuts to school funding and gross financial mismanagement by officials at the local level," Ms. McKeever said in a statement. "It's time our elected leaders take the issue of education funding seriously and provide our local schools with the resources they need so our children can get the education they deserve."

House Minority Leader Tim Greimel (D-Auburn Hills), whose district includes Pontiac Schools, said both the district and the state were at fault.

"No one disputes the severe mismanagement of the Pontiac School District," Mr. Greimel said. However, more can be done at the state level to provide adequate funding to all schools in Michigan. The lack of funding, in both per-pupil dollars and categorical funds, has harmed this school district and many others across Michigan, for years."

Fears Starting To Appear On Local Finance Issues In Wake Of Bankruptcy

As officials and the public watch the proceedings in the Detroit bankruptcy move ahead, new issues are arising affecting public finance in the state, leading at least one national firm to say investors should take care when dealing with municipal issues from Michigan.

A spokesperson for the Department of Treasury acknowledged that there was nervousness expressed by some investors on bonds issued by local governments. But Michigan and its communities continue to be a good investment, Terry Stanton said.

The Detroit bankruptcy should have no effect on other issuances by the state or other Michigan cities, Mr. Stanton said.

His comments came on the sudden decision on Thursday by Genesee County officials to delay the sale of more than $54 million in bonds.

Moody's Investors Services announced it was downgrading the bond rating for Wayne County, the state's largest county and home of Detroit.

On Friday, Standard and Poor's announced a rating for Michigan Finance Authority notes to help cover state aid payments to the Detroit Public Schools. While the district could face a huge drop in enrollment and its overall finances are weak, the state should not see significant delays in state aid payments during the 2013-14 fiscal year, the Wall Street rating agency said.

Some bond experts also said the Detroit bankruptcy was beginning to have some effect on bond sales for communities in the rest of the state.

Specifically in terms of the bankruptcy, however, S&P put out a statement on Friday saying it did not think the Detroit filing would not set a trend of other cities seeking bankruptcy protection.

Detroit, which S&P had downgraded seven times since 1999, was a specific issue and its filing reflected its inability to make significant headway in its finances, the agency said.

S&P acknowledged that municipal defaults and bankruptcies have increased in the last several years, but said its review holds to the expectation that nationally municipal finances are generally stable.

Mr. Stanton said the Detroit filing was a unique situation and the bankruptcy filing was the last viable option for Michigan's largest city.

The Genesee County decision caught many people by surprise. The bonds were to be tied to water-system revenues and backed by a limited tax, to help build water supplies from Lake Huron. Now the county gets much of its water through the Flint system, which in turn gets water from the Detroit Water and Sewerage Department.

It would have been the largest bond issuance since the bankruptcy. Flint, like Detroit, is under emergency management, and Genesee County has one of the highest percentages of residents living in poverty in the state.

Thus far county officials have not said why they held off on the sale.

In the meantime, Moody's said it was downgrading Wayne County's bond rating to Baaa3, close to junk status. The county has $726 million in general obligation debt. The rating agency raised worries about a depreciating tax base in the county.

But Mr. Stanton said only two communities out of the hundreds in the state were not considered investment grade by the rating agencies.

All communities are rated separately, and a number have the top ratings from all the agencies, which includes Fitch along with S&P and Moody's. Oakland County, next to Wayne and the state's second largest county, has a triple A rating, for example.

Saginaw County is still scheduled at this point to go ahead with a $61 million general obligation debt next week. The sale, rated Aa3 by Moody's, the fourth highest rating by the agency, will help finance pensions.

Mr. Stanton said, "Michigan and its local communities will continue to be sound, smart investments."

Barnett Says Talk Going On To Allow Local Millage Increases

There are some bipartisan discussions underway on whether to allow local school districts to hold elections for millage increases, Rep. Vicki Barnett (D-Farmington Hills) said Friday on public television's Off the Record program.

Ms. Barnett, who also said on the program she is not interested in being the Democratic candidate for lieutenant governor, said if the state were to attempt to raise the sales tax to pay for transportation and road improvements, she would focus the increased tax instead on helping pay college tuition.

Asked if allowing for those elections would violate one intent of Proposal A to reduce property taxes, Ms. Barnett said any increases would be voter approved.

When the Proposal A school finance reform was approved by the voters in 1994, it allowed for enhancement millages to be enacted by the voters in an intermediate school district. The provision has almost never been used, however.

Since first being elected to the House in 2008, Ms. Barnett said she has introduced legislation that would allow local school districts to hold elections to raise millages.

Now she said there have been some bipartisan discussions on the idea, though she did not say who was involved in those discussions and what direction they were going.

Raising the sales tax a penny to help pay tuition for Michigan students would also be an economic development concept for the state, she said. Tax cuts enacted by the Legislature are not succeeding in attracting businesses, she insisted, but companies would come to the state if they knew the state had a potentially well-educated workforce.

Detroit Bankruptcy: Pensioner Committee Ordered

A committee to oversee the interests of Detroit's pensioners was ordered on Friday during a hearing into the city's Chapter 9 Bankruptcy filing.

Also during the hearing before Judge Stephen Rhodes, lawyers for the city said they believed they could produce a restructuring plan by December 31. If such a plan is produced, it would beat by more than two months the March 3 deadline Mr. Rhodes set at a hearing earlier this week.

But much of the focus at the hearing held on Friday - which dealt with a number of issues as the legal process for dealing with the bankruptcy is just getting underway - was on how to deal with the interests of the city's more than 20,000 retirees.

The retirees are unsecured creditors under Chapter 9, and therefore are not automatically entitled to a creditor committee. In corporate bankruptcies, such as those under Chapter 11, unsecured creditors do have creditor committees.

The fate of the pensioners has become a major concern as the bankruptcy proceeds. Last week, Attorney General Bill Schuette said he would represent the pensioners to ensure the state's constitutional provision that public pensions not be impaired is enforced. Mr. Schuette will also represent the state's interests in the bankruptcy.

And Detroit's Emergency Manager Kevyn Orr said a creditor committee should be appointed for the pensioners because they do not have strong representation otherwise.

Mr. Rhodes said he would direct the U.S. trustee for the bankruptcy to appoint members of the retiree's committee.

But lawyers for the city pensioners argued that no one from the city should sit on the committee, nor should anyone representing unions for current workers.

A reorganization plan could show what the city expects to pay all its creditors. The city has as much as $20 billion in debt.

Half Of Voters Oppose Abortion Coverage Limits

Right to Life of Michigan might be starting out without the voters on its plan to prevent health insurance companies from offering abortion coverage as part of their base policy.

The group, which is collecting signatures to put the issue on the ballot next November (given its history an effort is likely to be successful), argues insurance by its nature pools funds to pay for claims, so those opposed to abortion would still be required to pay for it, particularly under the federal Patient Protection and Affordable Care Act requirement that everyone carry health insurance. The proposal would require customers to purchase a separate rider for abortion coverage.

But already half of voters oppose RTL's plan, a poll released Friday by Lambert, Edwards and Associates and Denno Research said.

The poll found only 42 percent of voters would support the plan, while 50 percent were opposed and 8 percent were undecided. Even among Republicans, a core constituency for RTL, only 57 percent supported the idea and 38 percent opposed it.

History shows opposition to a ballot proposal usually grows between the time it is introduced and the election.

It might be enough, though, for RTL to simply get the issue on the ballot, Jeff Lambert, president of Lambert, Edwards & Associates said. "Although half of voters polled are against limiting health insurance plans in this way, it may not matter if enough lawmakers support it," Mr. Lambert said. "This has been a successful way for Right to Life in the past to bypass a gubernatorial veto."

The state's initiated law process provides that any law placed on the ballot by enough signatures is presented to the Legislature, which has the opportunity to enact it before it goes to the voters.

However, opposition to the proposal may not matter. Since, presuming RTL gets enough signatures for the proposal, the Constitution gives the Legislature the authority to simply enact a measure at the people's instruction. In years best, RTL has used that tactic on other initiatives and avoided the ballot altogether.

Michigan, Illinois Partner Up On Medicaid Technology

Michigan and Illinois are teaming up to enable Illinois to access a technology that supports state Medicaid programs that Michigan already uses while saving Michigan potentially $10 million over five years, the Department of Community Health announced on Friday.

Through the Illinois Michigan Program Alliance for Core Technology project, Illinois will modernize its Medicaid Management Information System rather than implement a costlier stand-alone system. Illinois' system is more than 30 years old, the department said.

"This innovative and unprecedented alliance is a testament to the success of Michigan's Medicaid Management Information System, and the opportunity it presents for other states," said Nick Lyon, chief deputy director of the DCH, in a statement.

The management system processes and adjudicates all Medicaid claims, said DCH spokesperson Angela Minicuci. The Michigan system gives providers a single source for direct access to enrollment, and in the future, claim information and other Medicaid-based business functions.

Such alliances are being encouraged by the federal government, Ms. Minicuci said. The Centers for Medicare and Medicaid Services confirmed the approach is consistent with federal standards and regulations, and Ms. Minicuci said the partnership for the system will have no effect on Medicaid expansion being debated by the Legislature.

The department anticipates a decrease in overall administrative costs for both states. For Michigan, the partnership is expected to save 20 percent in operational costs, as well as potentially $10 million over a five-year period. Also, operational savings from the partnership are estimated to be $196 million for the federal government and $57 million for Illinois over a five year period compared to using a stand-alone system.

The cost for implementing the system will be significantly reduced from a conservative estimate of $190 million for a stand-alone system, for example, to $85 million for the shared cloud model. And since the project is 90 percent federally funded for implementation, this translates to a savings of $10 million for Illinois and $76 million to the federal government.

The first phase of the Michigan-Illinois system is expected to launch in early 2014, with full implementation expected in 2016.

Appeals Court Rules Jackson Fee Violates Headlee Amendment

Relying heavily on a Supreme Court decision striking down a similar type of fee in Lansing, the Court of Appeals on Friday ruled a storm water assessment in Jackson violated the Headlee Amendment.

The fee the city set up to avoid tapping its general fund to pay the costs of maintaining its storm water drainage system is in fact a tax enacted without public approval, Judge William Murray, Judge Joel Hoekstra and Judge Donald Owens ruled per curiam in Jackson County v. Jackson City (COA docket No. 307685).

The case was a consolidation of several brought by property owners against the city over the fee, which it began collecting in 2011.

The city decided to assess the fee to help meet rising costs for the storm water system and allow its general fund to maintain funds for other needs. The ordinance creating the fee assessed all properties, but also gave credits if property owners used storm water maintenance, such as rain gardens or rain barrels.

Quoting extensively from Bolt v. Lansing, in which the Supreme Court ruled a similar fee in Lansing was a tax, the court said the Headlee Amendment bars local governments from saying that their activities are services and then assessing a fee.

And the court said the fee is compulsory in nature, which bolstered its determination that the fee was an inappropriate tax.

Veterans Home Short On Psychiatric Care

Once the Grand Rapids Home for Veterans brings in some additional psychiatric services, it will have met all of the federal standards for veterans homes, officials said in announcing the results of the annual survey for the facility.

The home met 156 of the 158 standards set by the U.S. Department of Veterans, and partially met two regarding psychiatric care, Department of Military and Veterans Affairs officials said, and the psychiatric care improvements are coming with the upcoming state budget.

"Based on the State of Michigan audit released earlier this spring, the Legislature has appropriated $500,000 to fund psychiatric care at the Home," said Grand Rapids Home for Veterans Administrator Sara Dunne in a statement. "This appropriation allowed us to set in motion the process to secure the required psychiatric care. We have established an RFP for care, and procurement is currently underway. We expect to fully implement the required psychiatric care this fall."

The facility has come under fire from state employee unions and some residents after it converted its nurse aides to contract workers. Opponents of the move said it had negatively affected patient care.

The survey did not mention the issue.

Medicaid reform critical to improving mental health care in West Michigan (Guest column)

"Since my recent appointment to executive director at network180, I have had the privilege of meeting many individuals who have benefited from services and support for mental illness, substance use disorders, and developmental disabilities. While there are plenty of successes, many more in our state and county remain untreated, often due to lack of access to basic health care. Fortunately, we now have the opportunity to improve the overall health of many in our communities."

Detroit schools EM Jack Martin: True reformer?

"Detroit Public Schools Emergency Manager Jack Martin is conducting the summer ritual of walking door-to-door trying to generate renewed public interest in the beleaguered district. His goal is to recruit and enroll 5,000 more students by the opening of school on September 3. What gives him an outside chance is the deployment of a new strategy: giving parents and students a greater say in their choice of schools. Every year at this time, DPS volunteers, teachers, parents and community partners conduct a door-to-door enrollment drive aimed at both new and former students who might have left the district for better opportunities. Indeed, flight from the city explains much of the precipitous drop-off in enrollment from its 1966 peak of 298,000. Detroit has lost more than half of its population in the interim."

Volume #52, Report #178 -- Wednesday, September 11, 2013

Bipartisan Backing Carries 'Main Street Fairness' Bills

Certain online sellers with a presence in the state could be required to begin collecting the 6 percent sales or use tax under legislation the House Tax Policy Committee reported Wednesday, but with some believing the issue needs to be resolved at the federal level, it is unclear how much traction the bills will have in the full House.

The legislation (HB 4202 and HB 4203) cleared the committee on a 9-1 vote with five abstentions. Six Republicans and three Democrats voted yes.

House { HYPERLINK "http://www.gongwer.com/index.cfm?link=bio.cfm&nameid=226901&locid=1" } (R-Marshall) said the issue should really be solved on the federal level, and the question now is if the state's legislation is going to accomplish what the federal government isn't doing.

{ INCLUDEPICTURE \d "http://www.gongwer.com/public/JaseBolger.jpg" \y * MERGEFORMATINET }

{ INCLUDEPICTURE \d "http://www.gongwer.com/members/barnett-vicki.jpg" \y * MERGEFORMATINET }

House { HYPERLINK "http://www.gongwer.com/index.cfm?link

=bio.cfm&nameid=226901&locid=1" } (R-Marshall) and { HYPERLINK "http://www.gongwer.com/index.cfm?link=bio.cfm&nameid=204001&locid=1" } (D-Farmington Hills)

"You're not hearing opposition from me, but you're not hearing we're going to run this tomorrow," Mr. Bolger said to reporters after House session. "You're hearing me wrestle with what the federal government is not doing. You're hearing frustration from me that once again the federal government is not doing its job, so we're left to pick up their slack. You're hearing also concern about what's the best policy."

The "main street fairness" issue - so named because retailers say their businesses face a 6 percent disadvantage to the Amazons of the world who do not collect sales or use tax - is in the House Republicans action plan for the term. That action plan, unveiled earlier this year, declares, "We will remove the 6 percent competitive advantage that out-of-state online retailers enjoy over Michigan companies."

Ari Adler, spokesperson for Mr. Bolger, said the speaker has always thought it was a federal issue, and it is still a part of the action plan. Mr. Adler said it is still unclear if the best course of action would involve state legislation.

{ HYPERLINK "http://www.gongwer.com/index.cfm?link=bio.cfm&nameid=268601&locid=1" } (R-Utica), chair of the committee, said he abstained on the bills because he agreed it is a federal issue.

"Tax policy should be fair and across the board, and that can only be done at the federal level," he said.

Asked if he thought the federal government would act on legislation soon (a bill passed through the U.S. Senate in May and is now in the U.S. House) Mr. Farrington said: "I've got no confidence at all."

{ HYPERLINK "http://www.gongwer.com/index.cfm?link=bio.cfm&nameid=204001&locid=1" } (D-Farmington Hills), minority vice chair of the committee, also abstained. Ms. Barnett said the Department of Treasury still was not certain if the tax collected on Internet sellers would be sales or use tax. She also said it is a federal issue, and something she supports on the federal level.

Most of the sales tax goes to the School Aid Fund, and most of the use tax goes to the General Fund. The House Fiscal Agency analysis says it appears the majority of revenue generated from the bills would be sales tax, but it depends on how it is remitted.

"It's a tax increase on consumers who are looking for efficiency and convenience when they shop," Ms. Barnett said after committee. "There's no clear rules as to who would actually be forced to pay this tax. Probably, most importantly, the 1996 Telecommunications Act explicitly says that states are preempted from acting in this arena."

According to the Department of Treasury, about $482.4 million in sales and use tax revenue will be uncollected in the 2013-14 fiscal year, and nearly 60 percent of that is due to online sales. Although residents are supposed to remit the taxes in income tax returns, many do not.

The House Fiscal Agency analysis, however, says it is unlikely the bills would generate much revenue because sellers can move affiliated partners and warehouses to other states. To generate more revenue, federal legislation would need to be passed.

Mr. Farrington had the Democrats vote before the Republicans in the committee to make sure they didn't change their votes at the last minute, he said.

{ HYPERLINK "http://www.gongwer.com/index.cfm?link=bio.cfm&nameid=282201&locid=1" } (R-Lawton) was the lone no vote on both bills. { HYPERLINK "http://www.gongwer.com/index.cfm?link=bio.cfm&nameid=211501&locid=1" } (D-Warren), Rep. Bob Genetski (R-Saugatuck) and { HYPERLINK "http://www.gongwer.com/index.cfm?link=bio.cfm&nameid=266701&locid=1" } (R-New Boston) joined committee leadership in abstaining.

Voting yes were { HYPERLINK "http://www.gongwer.com/index.cfm?link=bio.cfm&nameid=209401&locid=1" } (D-Roseville), { HYPERLINK "http://www.gongwer.com/index.cfm?link=bio.cfm&nameid=313001&locid=1" } (D-Monroe), { HYPERLINK "http://www.gongwer.com/index.cfm?link=bio.cfm&nameid=267701&locid=1" } (D-Royal Oak), { HYPERLINK "http://www.gongwer.com/index.cfm?link=bio.cfm&nameid=226701&locid=1" } (R-Portage), { HYPERLINK "http://www.gongwer.com/index.cfm?link=bio.cfm&nameid=288901&locid=1" } (R-Mount Pleasant), { HYPERLINK "http://www.gongwer.com/index.cfm?link=bio.cfm&nameid=291501&locid=1" } (R-Petoskey), { HYPERLINK "http://www.gongwer.com/index.cfm?link=bio.cfm&nameid=284201&locid=1" } (R-Alto), { HYPERLINK "http://www.gongwer.com/index.cfm?link=bio.cfm&nameid=179401&locid=1" } (R-Saginaw Township) and { HYPERLINK "http://www.gongwer.com/index.cfm?link=bio.cfm&nameid=285601&locid=1" } (R-Park Township).

Educator Effectiveness Plan Has Long Road Ahead, Committee Chairs Say

The House and Senate Education committees on Wednesday jointly heard testimony in support of a teacher evaluation system that focuses on both in-class hours as well as individual student growth, but chairs of both the committees say there is still some time to go before any legislative action may come as a result.

"We want to hear from the education community," { HYPERLINK "http://www.gongwer.com/index.cfm?link=bio.cfm&nameid=93801&locid=1" } (R-St. Clair), chair of the Senate Education Committee, said after the meeting, noting the Senate committee will travel to Port Huron on September 26 to hear from teachers there who were part of the pilot program of the evaluation system being proposed by the Council for Educator Effectiveness.

"I think the committee will get great value hearing from teachers that have been evaluated on the pilot program," he said.

{ HYPERLINK "http://www.gongwer.com/index.cfm?link=bio.cfm&nameid=284201&locid=1" } (R-Alto), chair of the House Education Committee, said she and her members are also looking forward to hearing from educators and administrators before moving forward.

{ INCLUDEPICTURE \d "http://www.gongwer.com/members/pavlovnew.jpg" \y * MERGEFORMATINET }

{ INCLUDEPICTURE \d "http://www.gongwer.com/public/LisaPosthumusLyonsnew.jpg" \y * MERGEFORMATINET }

{ HYPERLINK "http://www.gongwer.com/index.cfm?link=bio.cfm&nameid=93801&locid=1" } (top) and { HYPERLINK "http://www.gongwer.com/index.cfm?link=bio.cfm&na

meid=284201 &locid=1" } "It's just a starting point," Ms. Lyons said after the joint meeting. "Our members are going to be talking with the education folks in their districts. It's important that we make sure we do this right and we do this well because it's that critical, not only to the educators and the administrators involved, but to the kids as well."

And because the committee members have to review the report by the council in addition to talking to educators in their district, there is still much work to be done before any legislative action can take place.

"We have a lot of work to do to break the report down," Mr. Pavlov said. "This is a very important step and it's a very significant reform that has to be done properly."

About half of the nearly three-hour committee was spent discussing - and questioning - { HYPERLINK "http://www.mcede.org/system/resources/BAhbBlsHOgZmSSIxMjAxMy8wNy8yMy8yMS80Ny81OS82NjYvRXhlY3V0aXZlU3VtbWFyeS5wZGYGOgZFVA/ExecutiveSummary.pdf" \t "blank" } reached by the council, chaired by Deborah Loewenberg Ball, dean of the School of Education at the University of Michigan. In addition to explaining the components of the council's recommendations, she said the state must adopt a tool and stick with it whole-heartedly.

"Currently, districts use some of these tools," Ms. Ball said, referencing her presentation to the committees. "Many of them adapt the tools a lot, which is to say they use only some of the things included. Our recommendation is that the tool be used as designed by the designer."

That is to say districts should not deviate, for the most part, from either the philosophy or the implementation of any one plan.

And rather than categorizing teachers in four different categories, the state should consider three: professional, provisional and ineffective.

The idea behind fewer categories is that there is less of a chance of misclassifying a teacher in a profession whose variables are always changing, as well as the philosophy that the evaluation system the council proposes seeks to ensure continued improvement for every grade of teacher, even the best (See { HYPERLINK "http://www.gongwer.com/index.cfm?link=news.cfm&article_id=521440103" }).

Most questions from committee members focused on implementation, a point which Ms. Ball noted would have to take time in order to be done right.

For example, to enter a "testing mania" that seems to be trending nationally, according to { HYPERLINK "http://www.gongwer.com/index.cfm?link=bio.cfm&nameid=211601&locid=1" } (D-Huntington Woods), is something that the state would have to re-examine annually, Ms. Ball said.

And any proposal that will work will work best if it is not tied to pay, particularly merit pay, Ms. Ball said.

"Our system is entirely oriented out of improvement," Ms. Ball said, responding to a question by { HYPERLINK "http://www.gongwer.com/index.cfm?link=bio.cfm&nameid=308601&locid=1" } (D-Dearborn Heights). "To build a true system of improvement, we recommend this not be tied to pay issues."

Although it may seem counter to conventional wisdom to not pay attention to student and teacher results on a per-school basis, the way the evaluation system is being proposed, "A teacher will not be penalized for having a student below growth if that teacher is producing substantial growth for that student," Ms. Ball explained.

And Sandi Jacobs, with the National Council on Teacher Quality in Washington, D.C., said nationally there are three components to a strong evaluation system: make student learning preponderant criterion, require observations from well-trained observers, and require annual evaluations for all teachers (even the great ones).

"Since 2009, we see states beginning to move forward on these policies," Ms. Jacobs said. "We've seen a great increase in annual evaluations, very big increase in student learning, and more and more using results for tenured learning."

Committee Again Exploring Religious Freedom For Adoption Agencies

Faith-based organizations said the change was needed to ensure they could follow their religious tenets, while civil rights groups said the legislation would open potential adoptive parents to discrimination as the House Families, Children and Seniors Committee opened discussion on legislation that would prohibit the state from requiring faith-based adoption and foster care agencies to violate their religious beliefs.

{ HYPERLINK "http://www.gongwer.com/index.cfm?link=bio.cfm&nameid=218701&locid=1" }, chair of the committee and lead sponsor of the package (HB 4927 and HB 4928), said his goal was to codify the Department of Human Services' current practice for overseeing the private agencies it licenses.

"This state has never required that these agencies abandon their faith, nor do I think it should," Mr. Kurtz said.

The bills would not, he said, change any current practices. "Anyone who can adopt today will be able to adopt under this bill," he said.

Supporters of the legislation said it would head off problems that have arisen in other states where mandates have required agencies to take actions that violated their tenets. The Michigan Catholic Conference, in a fact sheet on the issue (officials voiced their support but did not speak to the bills) said the church had been forced to close its operations in some other states because of new state mandates brought either through statute or court ruling.

"These bills will ensure the public/private effort to find homes for children exists well into the future," Tom Hickson, vice president for public policy and advocacy for the Catholic Conference, said in a statement. "Faith-based adoption and foster care agencies, Catholic Charities for example, are prevalent in communities throughout the state and offer a multitude of services to destitute and vulnerable persons. It is imperative that the state continues to maintain and strengthen diversity in child placement."

Any future move to require faith-based agencies to violate their faith would mean loss not only of those agencies from the state-supervised system, but also of the families that support them, William Blacquiere, president of Bethany Christian Services, told the committee.

"When faith-based agencies are gone, so are most of the families that will adopt and provide foster care," he said. "We are not denying children a loving home. We are doing the opposite. We are ensuring there will be a loving home."

The bills would, though, allow agencies to turn away potential adoptive parents, opponents said.

"We should not be turning away willing and capable families willing to help a child in need," Emily Dievendorf, managing director of Equality Michigan, told the committee.

"Currently, faith based agencies are denying adoptions for a variety of reasons, including sexual orientation," Jay Kaplan, staff attorney for the American Civil Liberties Union-Michigan LGBT Project, though he could not, when asked by committee members, list any cases where the group had filed complaints based on such discrimination.

The bills, he said, would allow faith-based agencies to be exempt from both state civil rights laws and requirements that they act in the best interests of the child in favor of supporting their religious beliefs.

"No public funds should go to a supposed welfare agency that ignores the best interests of the child," said Nicolette Siragusa, pastor of the First Congregational United Church of Christ in Grand Ledge.

Much of the opposition came from gay rights groups, but some also raised concerns that agencies would turn away couples of other faiths as well.

"I don't believe we should be sending people on a mad search to find an agency that won't discriminate against them," Ms. Dievendorf said.

Mr. Blacquiere acknowledged his agency would not directly serve a Muslim family.

"We would work with the network of agencies we work with," he said, likely finding a Muslim agency to help that family.

Mr. Blacquiere said amendments were being developed to require development of such networks of providers to ensure all potential adoptive families are served.

Mr. Kurtz expected the bills to come up for additional discussion and potential movement in the coming weeks.

Bills Addressing Unemployment Agency Fraud, Compliance In House Commerce

A package of bills designed to bring the Unemployment Insurance Agency into compliance with federal standards and to properly handle fraudulent claims were discussed in the House Commerce Committee on Wednesday.

The bills (HB 4949, HB 4950, HB 4951, HB 4952, HB 4953 and HB 4954) did receive some criticism from members of the committee.

The more controversial piece of the package is { HYPERLINK "http://www.gongwer.com/index.cfm?link=bio.cfm&nameid=269801&locid=1" }'s (R-Ray Township) bill, HB 4952, that would end a person's unemployment benefits if he or she failed a prospective employer's drug test.

Delaney McKinley, director of human resource policy for the Michigan Manufacturers Association, said a condition of receiving unemployment benefits is the person must be looking for suitable work, and cannot refuse that work.

"If there is a drug test required as a condition of that employment, if they refuse to take it or they failed it, they are essentially refusing that job," she said.

Ms. McKinley said the bill does not require a prospective employer to give a drug test, and doesn't require the prospective employer to even report the failure.

Tim Hughes, with the United Auto Workers, said in written testimony that the U.S. Department of Labor has not ruled on state legislation linking pre-employment drug tests to refusal of suitable work, but "it is certainly possible that they could find Michigan out of compliance with federal law under the terms of this legislation."

The first bill (HB 4949) would give the Unemployment Insurance Agency the ability to handle fraud and the improper payment of benefits. The agency would be able to receive payments for improper and fraudulent benefits from the moment a person began receiving the benefit.

Under current law, the agency receives the repayment from the time it was notified.

Some members were concerned the bill would force some unemployment claimants to pay for months of benefits that they cannot afford because of a mistake in the system or an appellate decision.

{ HYPERLINK "http://www.gongwer.com/index.cfm?link=bio.cfm&nameid=268601&locid=1" } (R-Utica) said he once had an employee who was forced to pay 9 months of unemployment benefits, that the person could not afford, back to the agency through no fault of his own.

{ HYPERLINK "http://www.gongwer.com/index.cfm?link=bio.cfm&nameid=204001&locid=1" } (D-Farmington Hills) and { HYPERLINK "http://www.gongwer.com/index.cfm?link=bio.cfm&nameid=267701&locid=1" } (D-Royal Oak) raised the same issue with the bill.

Wendy Block, with the Michigan Chamber of Commerce, said she would be willing to look at other language to better separate a mistake made concerning benefits from actual fraudulent activity. But she said it is fair for the money to go back to the employer either way.

"It's not the claimant's money," she said. "At the end of the day it is employers' tax dollars."

Mr. Townsend also was concerned that the first bill could potentially require unemployed persons to pay back money they could not afford to the agency, but HB 4950 allows employers four chances, or 2 percent of their unemployment requests, to fail to provide information to the agency before the employer is penalized.

The bill specifies when an employer or employer's agent has a pattern of failing to respond with timely or adequate information to the agency, the employer would not be credited the funds it sent out for benefits.

Mr. Hughes said the bill allows employers "free passes" for not providing timely and accurate information, and also provides that unemployed workers have to pay back benefits received because of employers violating the law.

{ HYPERLINK "http://www.gongwer.com/index.cfm?link=bio.cfm&nameid=291501&locid=1" } (R-Petoskey), chair of the committee, said there would be another meeting next week on the issue, and more meetings if needed to allow more testimony. The bills need to be in law by October 21 to conform to the federal government's standards.

The other bills in the package would specify funds recovered by the agency because of fraud on behalf of the employer or employee would be credited no less than 15 percent into the Unemployment Trust Fund, which helps ensure sustainability of the program (HB 4951). This is to comply with federal standards and is accompanied by HB 4954, which amends complementary sections in the law. HB 4953 is a complement to HB 4950.

Bentivolio Leading In Early Poll

If the election was today, { HYPERLINK "http://www.gongwer.com/index.cfm?link=bio.cfm&nameid=253101&locid=1" } would win renomination from Republicans in his 11th U.S. House District, a Murray Communications-Portable Insights-Combat Data poll released Wednesday said.

But money could turn those numbers, pollsters said.

Of 717 likely Republican voters, Mr. Bentivolio (R-Milford) led challenger David Trott 59.55-40.45. That lead was higher (62.47-37.53) among women than among men.

The automated poll had an error margin of 3.66 percentage points.

The key takeaway, though, is the two are close enough for Mr. Trott to make up the gap with enough spending. "Bentivolio can hold this seat. Republican primary voters seem to be willing to give him a chance. But, if he doesn't raise enough money to be competitive with Trott, I suspect this 19% margin will begin to evaporate," Christopher Mark of Portable Insights said in a statement.

Patrick Murray of Murray Communications and Brian Bellgowan of Combat Data aired respective surprise over Mr. Bentivolio's lead, given his recent comments in the media, and Mr. Trott's support given he has not yet begun campaigning.

Mr. Bentivolio got national attention for talking about his desire to impeach President Barack Obama and has gotten some bad publicity for showing interest in holding a hearing on a debunked, much-mocked conspiracy called "Chem Trails" whose believers think the government is putting toxic chemicals into jet contrails to conduct experiments on the public.

Young Couple Charged In Trooper Slaying

19-year-old Eric Knysz shot and killed State Police Trooper Paul Butterfield, and Mr. Knysz's 20-year-old pregnant wife Sarah Knysz aided his getaway afterward, prosecutors charged Wednesday in formally accusing the pair in Mr. Butterfield's death.

The Mason County Prosecutor's Office authorized charges against Mr. Knysz, a Luther resident, of homicide-murder of peace officer, weapons-felony firearm for the possession of a firearm during the commission of a murder of a peace officer, carrying a concealed weapon and unlawful driving away of an automobile.

The murder count is punishable by life in prison without possibility of parole; the weapons charge punishable by two years served consecutively with the life sentence; the CCW charge punishable by up to five years in prison, a $2,500 fine, or both; and the driving away charge punishable by up to five years in prison. Prosecutors also notified Mr. Knysz of his status as a habitual offender/second felony offense that would multiply the maximum penalties by 1.5.

Mr. Knysz was shot by a State Police trooper at a gas station/convenience store, reportedly in the leg with a non-life threatening injury, and will be arraigned once he is discharged from the hospital and returned to Mason County. He allegedly shot Mr. Butterfield during a traffic stop in Sherman Township in Mason County.

Ms. Knysz was arraigned Wednesday at the 79th District Court in Ludington on a charge of accessory after the fact to the murder of Mr. Butterfield, punishable by up to five years in prison, a $10,000 fine, or both; and unlawful driving away of an automobile, a felony punishable by up to five years in prison.

Magistrate Patricia Baker set bond for Ms. Knysz at $250,000 cash or surety. Ms. Knysz was remanded to the Mason County Jail pending the posting of that bond and a September 25 preliminary examination.

Mason County Prosecutor Paul Spaniola said in a statement that Manistee County Prosecutor Ford Stone is reviewing the case for crimes the Knyszs might have committed in Manistee County, where they were caught. Mr. Spaniola said Lake County Prosecutor Craig Cooper also is exploring possible charges in his jurisdiction.

The investigation remains ongoing. State Police spokesperson Shanon Banner said she could not disclose any new information about what led to Mr. Butterfield pulling over the Knyszs, what might have led to Mr. Knysz allegedly shooting Mr. Butterfield and what other criminal activity the Knyszs might have committed besides the shooting.

The Muskegon Chronicle reported that Mr. Knysz had a lengthy criminal record, but no outstanding arrest warrants.

Poll Shows Snyder Improving Against Schauer; Peters, Land Tied

{ HYPERLINK "http://www.gongwer.com/index.cfm?link=bio.cfm&nameid=245801&locid=1" } has moved out to a lead against his likely Democratic opponent, former U.S. Rep. Mark Schauer, in a new poll after previous surveys showed the pair in a statistical tie.

The survey from EPIC/MRA, released to the Detroit Free Press, put Mr. Snyder at 44 percent and Mr. Schauer at 36 percent. That compares to a 39-39 tie from an EPIC/MRA poll in May and an April poll from the same firm that had Mr. Schauer at 39 percent and Mr. Snyder at 38 percent.

The live operator poll of likely voters was conducted Sunday through Tuesday and had an error margin of plus or minus 4 percentage points.

Mr. Schauer still remains unknown to most voters. But notably, Mr. Snyder's favorability and job approval ratings have improved considerably since May, during which time he pushed hard for Medicaid expansion and authorized Detroit to file for bankruptcy.

In May, 45 percent said they had a favorable impression of Mr. Snyder compared to 44 percent unfavorable. Now Mr. Snyder is at 49 percent favorable, 38 percent unfavorable. On job approval, Mr. Snyder was at 44 percent positive, 54 percent negative. That is improved from a 38-58 spread in May.

Meanwhile, EPIC/MRA continues to show the U.S. Senate race close between the presumptive Democratic nominee, { HYPERLINK "http://www.gongwer.com/index.cfm?link=bio.cfm&nameid=7801&locid=1" } of Bloomfield Township, and the lone declared Republican candidate, former Secretary of State Terri Land. Mr. Peters had 38 percent to 37 percent for Ms. Land.

Supreme Court Issues Order On Translation Services In Courts

In a move it said will help assure access to justice to Michigan residents who have limited English-speaking skills, the Supreme Court unveiled an order Wednesday requiring all courts in the state to provide interpreters for those individuals.

Under the order, persons who can afford translation services will be charged for those services, while lower-income individuals will not.

In a press conference, { HYPERLINK "http://www.gongwer.com/index.cfm?link=bio.cfm&nameid=75601&locid=1" } and { HYPERLINK "http://www.gongwer.com/index.cfm?link=bio.cfm&nameid=334301&locid=1" } said the rule would help "every person, every party" have access to the court system. That would include situations such as domestic abuse cases where a spouse needs to request a personal protection order, but has difficulty speaking English.

That would prevent, Mr. Young said, a situation of a judge saying, "Please bring your husband in to translate for you. That would be a problem."

The order was not unanimous. { HYPERLINK "http://www.gongwer.com/index.cfm?link=bio.cfm&nameid=114801&locid=1" } dissented, arguing the state was effectively being coerced into creating the rule by the U.S. Department of Justice or face the prospect of the state losing federal funds. "The rules being adopted today under the coercive circumstances created by the (Department of Justice) are both unnecessary and ill-advised," Mr. Markman said.

But in the press conference, Mr. Young said former Justice Marilyn Kelly began working on the issue before the federal government sent a letter to all state supreme courts calling on those courts to help assist persons officially designated limited-English-proficient.

{ HYPERLINK "http://www.gongwer.com/index.cfm?link=bio.cfm&nameid=334301&locid=1" } discusses the order while { HYPERLINK "http://www.gongwer.com/index.cfm?link=bio.cfm&nameid=75601&locid=1" } listens.

Already a number of counties provide translation service and assistance to persons with actions before the courts, the two justices said, and they praised Wayne County particularly.

But not all counties provide such service, they said, and under the rules and order issued, all the courts must prepare a language access plan as a local administrative order by December 11.

Those affected by the order will be anyone with legal decision-making authority, which could include a parent in juvenile matters. The rules and order also deal with any trial, hearing or appearance before any judge, magistrate, referee or other hearing officer.

The rules require the courts to use certified interpreters for limited English participants. If a certified translator is not available, the court will then have to assess whether the proceeding should be delayed or if the court should use a qualified translator.

Mr. Young and Ms. McCormack also said technology could assist a court by accessing a translator online or by telephone.

Mr. Young said he was unaware of any case where lack of access to a translator had been an issue in an appeal. "But that is not a reason not to act," Mr. Young said.

In his dissent, Mr. Markman said the federal "demands" were "staggering," and effectively would allow a "Gulf state emir or a South American multi-millionaire businessman" who may choose to file a lawsuit have access to free translation services.

Theoretically, he argued, the Supreme Court would also have to have translators available for the court's learning center.

And, Mr. Markman said, the federal government fails to show how the current system has failed to ensure persons have access to justice if they have limited English skills.

Young: Working Hard To Put Aside Past

With a history of rancor marking the Supreme Court for more than a decade, { HYPERLINK "http://www.gongwer.com/index.cfm?link=bio.cfm&nameid=75601&locid=1" } and { HYPERLINK "http://www.gongwer.com/index.cfm?link=bio.cfm&nameid=334301&locid=1" } said the court has worked in an extremely collegial fashion this year.

Meeting with reporters to discuss a new rule and order on translation services (see related story), the two even engaged in some clowning. After Ms. McCormack talked about how her first year on the court had been marked by "incredible collegiality," Mr. Young made a show of handing her a $10 bill. (She later returned it, and Mr. Young said he would need it for groceries.)

While it is Ms. McCormack's first year on the court, it is Mr. Young's 15th year, and he said it had been the best year of his tenure.

"We are respectful of each other's views," he said. "The court is willing to listen to each other."

In some cases, that listening to one another has meant that in some opinions the minority opinion has ended up becoming the majority opinion.

"We have worked very hard to put our past aside," Mr. Young said.

That past included years where opinions nearly smoked with fury expressed by the members for each other. The court has seen significant change in personnel in recent years as former Justice Elizabeth Weaver - who was outspoken in challenging court procedure - resigned in 2010. Former Justice Maura Corrigan - one of Ms. Weaver's targets, but also one who gave as good as she got - left in 2011 to become director of the Department of Human Services.

And in January, former Justice Diane Hathaway resigned before pleading guilty to federal fraud charges. She began serving a prison sentence this summer.

Mr. Young said this is a "wonderful court."

Every top court in every state should have "talented and learned lawyers," he said, and "I hope this is that court."

When one reporter said it was hard to imagine Mr. Young conducting a similar press conference with Ms. Hathaway, Mr. Young said, "You have a limited imagination."

Senate Passes Child Abduction Legislation

The Senate on Wednesday unanimously passed legislation that would help ensure children would not be abducted by their parents during divorce proceedings.

The bill, SB 325, would establish the Uniform Child Abduction Prevention Act, which is intended to prevent the abduction of children by establishing standards for determining whether a child is at risk for abduction by one of his or her parents.

"My legislation empowers judges to order abduction prevention measures in child custody when evidence of a credible risk of child abduction is established," said bill sponsor { HYPERLINK "http://www.gongwer.com/index.cfm?link=bio.cfm&nameid=82701&locid=1" } (R-Grand Ledge), in a statement.

If a court determines a credible risk exists that the child will be abducted, it may order provisions and measures to prevent such a thing from happening. Some warning signs of possible abductions could be a parent suddenly getting passports for children, threatening to abduct a child, undergoing a change in citizenship status and other high-risk factors, Mr. Jones said.

Accordingly, the provisions include travel restrictions, prohibiting the individual from removing the child from the state, or placing the child's name on the U.S. Department of State's Child Passport Issuance Alert Program.

{ HYPERLINK "http://www.gongwer.com/index.cfm?link=bio.cfm&nameid=56201&locid=1" } (R-Hillsdale) supported the legislation, but warned his colleagues that extending judicial discretion too much could have unintended consequences down the line. The bill passed 37-0 as Senate { HYPERLINK "http://www.gongwer.com/index.cfm?link=bio.cfm&nameid=60101&locid=1" } (D-East Lansing) was absent from session.

Courser (Sort Of) Downplays Governor Talk

Speculation prompted by the Right Michigan blog's countdown clock for a Republican primary challenger to { HYPERLINK "http://www.gongwer.com/index.cfm?link=bio.cfm&nameid=245801&locid=1" } led tea party activist Todd Courser to scoff Wednesday at the idea it would be him.

"Right now there is a little buzz on a primary challenge to { HYPERLINK "http://www.gongwer.com/index.cfm?link=bio.cfm&nameid=245801&locid=1" } and some are predicting that I am the one that is going to announce at the Mackinac Leadership Conference," he said in an email he also posted to Facebook about the upcoming Republican Party event on Mackinac Island. "I will say that this is news to me."

But Mr. Courser also said: "I believe that at the very least we should not assume that any battle to attempt to unseat this governor is lost. It is imperative that we defend liberty and conservatism at any and all levels."

Mr. Courser urged primary challenges against those compromising the conservative Republican brand.

"But we also need to be more than passionate; we need to be strategic and realistic about where our efforts will have the most impact on the advancement of conservatism," he said. "I have and continue to explore every option available that will advance conservatism and unite the party around those principles. I believe that the Lord will lead and provide for whatever option he directs."

Audit Praises Prison Mental Health Services, Finds Some Problems

A performance audit of Mental Health Services in the Department of Corrections resulted in mostly positive reviews for the agency, but criticized it on some aspects of its documentation and meeting required timeframes for evaluations.

{ HYPERLINK "http://www.audgen.michigan.gov/finalpdfs/12_13/r471032012.pdf" \t "blank" } concluded that most aspects of Mental Health Services operated effectively.

But it found the agency did not conduct all evaluations and assessments within required time frames and did not document all required evaluations and assessments. The audit cautioned that these problems undermine the ability of the agency to ensure it met prisoners' needs in a timely fashion.

Agency procedures require the completion of an evaluation from a qualified mental health professional and a comprehensive psychiatric evaluation within 14 days of a prisoner being referred to MHS. But auditors, which reviewed records for 90 prisoners, found that 11 percent of qualified mental health professional evaluations occurred from three to 17 days late and 25 percent of comprehensive psychiatric evaluations were three to 114 days late.

Among the documentation problems found among the 58 prisoners reviewed who transferred to a different MHS level of care were that MHS did not document that it conducted 12 percent of the required mental health evaluations, 4 percent of the required psychiatric evaluations and 25 percent of the required activity therapy assessments.

The audit also found that MHS did not document or update all required individual treatment plans within required time frames. Depending on the level of care, those procedures require the updating of an individual treatment plan between one day and 10 days of a prisoner's admission or transfer to a new level of care. In 13 percent of 90 instances, MHS did not document or update individual treatment plans for prisoners admitted or transferred to a different level of care with five coming six to 95 days late and two 11 to 69 days late.

In some cases, MHS did not properly document all required notes, reviews, evaluations and assessments in prisoners' mental health records to ensure mentally ill prisoners received all mental health services consistent with their individual treatment plans.

In 35 of 61 records where MHS recommended case management, MHS did not document 41 percent of the required case manager or progress notes.

MHS officials indicated in the audit that they agreed with all the recommendations and that they are taking steps to comply.

The audit was conducted from April through September 2012 and generally covered operations from October 1, 2009, through August 31, 2012.

Army Veteran Sues State For Denying Him 'INFIDEL' License Plate

A U.S. Army veteran from the Upper Peninsula who served in the Iraq war filed a lawsuit Wednesday in the U.S. District Court in Grand Rapids against the Department of State for denying his request for a personalized license plate saying "INFIDEL".

Sergeant Michael Matwyuk sought the plate as a way to show defiance toward insurgents who labeled him and other U.S. soldiers as infidels. But the department denied the plate under the provision in the Motor Vehicle Code allowing it to do so with requests "that might carry a connotation offensive to good taste and decency."

The American Civil Liberties Union of Michigan, filing { HYPERLINK "http://www.aclumich.org/sites/default/files/ACLU_InfidelComplaint_9-2013.pdf" \t "blank" } on behalf of Mr. Matwyuk, said that policy violates the First and Fourteenth amendments to the U.S. Constitution.

"As American soldiers in Iraq, we were called 'infidels' on a daily basis. As a way to cope, we decided to take this word, meant to hurt and demean us, as our own," Mr. Matwyuk said in a statement distributed by the ACLU. "It's a point of pride and patriotism that many of us identify with, just as we would identify with the word 'soldier.' This license plate is simply an expression of my service as an Iraqi combat veteran."

Appeals Court: Law Barring Vehicular Death Instruction Unconstitutional

A divided panel of the Court of Appeals ruled Wednesday that a state law that prohibits a judge from instructing a jury on a lesser charge in vehicular death cases was unconstitutional.

The court, in People v. Jones ({ HYPERLINK "http://publicdocs.courts.mi.gov:81/OPINIONS/FINAL/COA/20130910_C312966_47_312966.OPN.PDF" \t "blank" }) held the statute violated principles held since the 1840s that a jury may convict an individual of the crime charged or of a lesser included offense.

The decision, by { HYPERLINK "http://www.gongwer.com/index.cfm?link=bio.cfm&nameid=302801&locid=1" } and joined by { HYPERLINK "http://www.gongwer.com/index.cfm?link=bio.cfm&nameid=245701&locid=1" }, upheld a ruling by the Wayne Circuit Court to provide an instruction to the jury that Thabo Jones could be convicted of a moving violation that caused death.

Mr. Jones was charged with reckless driving that caused death, and the prosecutor appealed the circuit court action.

But the court held the law's requirement that an instruction on the lesser crime fails to take into consideration that there is no such limitation if a case is before a judge only or that a jury could still find a defendant guilty of the lesser crime.

The court also said the Legislature can draft a statute so narrowly that the elements of a crime could preclude a lesser offense. But that did not happen in this situation.

Dissenting, { HYPERLINK "http://www.gongwer.com/index.cfm?link=bio.cfm&nameid=152501&locid=1" } pointed out that the requirement that a jury not be instructed in the lesser charge does not block the jury from deciding to convict on the basis of that lesser charge.

The Legislature may not establish procedural rules but alone has the power to establish substantive law, she said. And, she said, the law in question does not infringe on procedure or practice and therefore was properly adopted.

Snyder Names New Flint Emergency Manager, Darnell Earley

Saginaw City Manager Darnell Earley was named by { HYPERLINK "http://www.gongwer.com/index.cfm?link=bio.cfm&nameid=245801&locid=1" } to be the new emergency manager for Flint after manager Michael Brown resigned.

Mr. Brown will leave the post on October 31. In his resignation letter to Mr. Snyder, which he submitted last week, Mr. Brown cited the death of his brother as a reason to step aside now.

Mr. Snyder praised Mr. Brown, saying he provided calm leadership during a difficult time. During his tenure as emergency manager, the city was able to finish the 2012-13 fiscal year with a surplus.

Mr. Earley has been the Saginaw city manager for eight years. Before going to Saginaw, Mr. Earley was the Flint city administrator and briefly served as the city's temporary mayor in 2002.

Baiting had been banned in several townships as part of the effort to eradicate bovine tuberculosis. Because Iosco County is now designated as TB-free, the Department of Natural Resources has recommended lifting the baiting ban.

JACK SPENCER: Michigan's U.S. Senate race: Must win vs. might win

"On election night 2014 the usual dizzying array of election results will be buzzing over TV, radio and the Internet. There will be the various national races from around the country, the Michigan gubernatorial race, Michigan's U.S. Senate race, state Senate races, state House races, possibly a statewide ballot proposal or two, and numerous local races and ballot issues."

The importance of federally qualified health centers and the Affordable Care Act

"About six months after the Affordable Care Act (ACA) was passed in 2010, our Center hosted a symposium in Ann Arbor on the future of the health care safety net. Sara Rosenbaum, an expert on both the ACA and federally qualified health centers (FQHCs), spoke at the event and her remarks emphasized that the ACA was designed to have FQHCs as a centerpiece. Her viewpoint was a surprise to many who had not focused on the centrality of the connection between FQHCs and the ACA. But, as we now head into the launch of the major coverage expansions included in the ACA, it is clearer how important FQHCs have become in the fabric of the health care delivery system."
